Nats Lose Both Games To Boston, 4-3 and 6-2

Bosox Take First On Error in 10th; Ray Scarborough Slammed in Second

By Shirley Povich
Post Reporter

The Red Sox beat the Nats last night, and you can say that all over again without being repetitious because it happened twice as 29,069 saddened Griffith Stadium fans watched the double-header.

By twilight the Red Sox licked the Nats, 4-3, in 10 innings with the help of Eddie Yost's wild throw, and in the second game they romped to a 6-2 victory over their former tormentor, Ray Scarborough.

They clubbed Scarborough for five runs in the first inning and the Nats were a doomed ball club from that point, it developed. For the Red Sox had working for them a three-hit pitcher in young Chuck Stobbs who struck out 10 men along the way.

It was the twilight game, though, that packed the most anguish for the Nats and their houseful of fans. They watched Conrado Marrero flop dismally as a starting pitcher with the Red Sox hammering his el curvo and they saw a tremendous relief pitching job by Lloyd Hittle come to naught.

Yost's Error Costly

They wiped out Joe Dobson's 3-0 lead to get a tie, finally, in the eighth inning, and Hittle turned in five scoreless relief innings before Yost inspired the winning run in the tenth. After a smart stop of Dobson's grounder with one out, Yost made a two-base wild throw.

On DiMaggio's single to left, Dobson cautiously held up at third base but he scored the winning run a moment later on Pesky's single to center.

And in their own half of the tenth the Nats got a rough break when Eddie Robinson opened up with a long drive to right center, a certain triple that was held to a double by the ground rules after the ball hopped into the pitchers' bullpen.

Dobson was unyielding at that point, though. Mele sacrificed Robinson to third but Dobson got rid of Dente on a popup, and sealed his victory by holding Robertson to a soft fly ball.

In the first game, the Red Sox displayed no awe whatsoever of Connie Marrero, recent conqueror of the Tigers. In fact, they displayed a great fondness for him and the stuff he was throwing. They hated to see him leave in the middle of the fourth inning.

By that time they had slugged the little Cuban for nine hits and three runs and his el curvo pitch was down their alley.

Zarilla and Goodman put singles together in the second inning that developed into a run, Zarilla scor-

Switchmen Cancel Strike Threat To 10 Railroads

The switchmen's union has canceled its threat of a June 1 strike against 10 Western railroads, the National Mediation Board said last night.

Announcement of the cancellation was made by Francis A. O'Neill, jr., chairman of the board.

Sufficient progress has been made in negotiations, O'Neill said in a statement to warrant the Mediation Board continuing its efforts to settle the differences between the union and the railroads.

The union, whose full name is the Switchmen's Union of North America, had threatened to call out 6000 members in vital yard service.

Most of the lines that would have been affected are west of Chicago.

The union is demanding a 40-hour week with the same pay now received for 48 hours. It also is seeking time and a half for Saturday work and double time for Sunday work.

Seventeen non-operating rail unions, with 1 million members, won similar demands last September.

Senate Investigators in Miami

Kefauver Criticizes Florida For Lax Enforcement of Law

Fay Asked to Check Erickson Testimony

By Chalmers M. Roberts
Post Reporter

District Attorney George Morris Fay was asked yesterday to check the recent Senate testimony of Gambler Frank Erickson for possible perjury action.

The request came from Senator McFarland (D., Ariz.), chairman of the Senate Commerce subcommittee which heard Erickson admit he broke betting laws.

Some time ago McFarland asked Fay to make a similar check on the testimony of Frank Costello, alleged No. 1 gambler in the Nation. Fay has replied he is making a careful study of the Costello matter.

In the Erickson case, McFarland noted that reports of the raids on the gambler's New York headquarters indicated evidence of facts contrary to Erickson's testimony here.

The Senator said the committee was "of the opinion that such notorious characters as Erickson should not lightly be permitted to get away with falsehoods."

The latest move against Erickson compounded his troubles, it appeared from the wire dispatches from Florida. Chairman Kefauver (D., Tenn.) of the Senate Crime Committee and Senator Hunt (D.,

Officials Are Called In Surprise Hearing

Miami, Fla., May 27 (U.P.).—Senate crime investigators concluded a two-day secret hearing here late today and revealed they had examined minutely the Florida activities of New York gambler Frank Erickson.

Senator Estes Kefauver (D., Tenn.) said he was "most satisfied" with the results of the opening investigation of the committee he heads.

"We got more information than we expected," he said.

Although Erickson's Florida operations, uncovered by New York investigators recently, was the chief reason for the committee's rush flight to Miami yesterday, Kefauver said his group also had learned a great deal about Florida crime and gambling activities in general.

He informed the State that it had "certain law enforcement officers" who he said "are not very anxious to enforce the laws of the State.

"An aroused public opinion," he advised, would "insure decent law enforcement."

"People in other parts of the Nation have been operating in a big way here," Kefauver told

Loyalty Program Defended

McCarthy's Charges Are Like Nazi Tactics, McGrath Says

Omaha, Nebr., May 27 (AP).—Attorney General J. Howard McGrath tonight compared the Communists-in-Government charges of Republican Senator Joseph R. McCarthy to the police state tactics of Hitler's gestapo.

McGrath coupled a broad-scale Administration attack on McCarthy with a defense of the Government loyalty program set up to keep Communists, fellow travelers and other security risks out of Federal jobs.

"This program," said McGrath, "has established that only in a small fraction of cases, less than one-tenth of one percent of the persons checked, has there been found any reasonable ground for belief that a Government employe was disloyal. That is a wonderful record and attests to the high caliber of character among our Federal employes. It demonstrates too that your Government has been alert to the danger.

"Final checks of Governmental employes now show that not one single person who has been finally adjudicated as disloyal under the loyalty program is employed by the Government at this time."

In Washington tonight McCarthy retorted:

"The American people should be disturbed by the fact that each time the Congress tries to dig out Communists, the Justice Department screams loudly.

"I would suggest that the Attorney General would be serving the Nation better if, instead of going out making speeches against the exposure of Communists, he would come back and start immediate prosecution in the Amerasia case."

McGrath did not mention Mc-

Sawyer Asks Remington and Lee to Resign

Two Commerce Dept. Executives Say They Won't Quit Under Fire

By Alfred Friendly
Post Reporter

Secretary of Commerce Charles Sawyer has decided that two of the Department's officials under fire on disloyalty charges would have their choice of resigning or being fired.

It was announced yesterday that Sawyer had ordered department personnel officials to seek the resignations of William W. Remington and Michael E. Lee, and, if their resignations are not forthcoming, to start proceedings "looking toward their separation" from the department.

New loyalty cases on both men are now pending, but decisions have not been reached. In an announcement, the Comemrce Department said Sawyer's action "is in no wise intended to reflect in any way on the loyalty of either of these two men." The action was taken, rather, "in the interest of good administration in the department."

It was learned, however, that Sawyer's orders do not look toward a mere suspension pending a loyalty board decision, but call for flat and permanent separation.

Remington and Lee at once announced they would not resign. Remington issued a statement declaring:

"I cannot, of course, resign from the Commerce Department under fire. I have performed my work there to the very best of my ability. Whatever my personal wishes might be in this matter there are questions of principle and integrity involved which I cannot ignore.

"My loyalty has been affirmed by the President's Loyalty Review Board. I am willing to see this fight through."

Lee, in a statement issued last night, declared:

"I have been informed that Secretary Sawyer has requested my

GM Signs Contract For 5 Years With Electrical Union

Detroit, May 27 (AP). — General Motors Corp. signed a five-year contract tonight with the CIO International Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers. The agreement is patterned after the pact signed Tuesday by GM with the CIO United Auto Workers.

The contract, nonreopenable for five years, covers about 32,000 workers. The union, formed by the CIO last fall, represents employes at these plants:

Frigidaire and Delco Products, Dayton, Ohio; Packard Electric, Warren, Ohio; Delco Appliance, Rochester, N. Y., and Delco-Remy Battery Plant, New Brunswick, N. J.

Publisher Meets 4 Senators

Post's 'Road Back' Editorial Stirs Mixed Forum Reaction

A mixed bag of Senators came up with a mixed set of reactions last evening to The Washington Post editorial, "The Road Back to America."

One of them Douglas (D., Ill.) gave it warmest indorsement. The proposal to set up a nonpartisan commission on national security appeared to him, he said, "essential."

He likened the proposal to the British institution of a royal commission, whose finding "raised the whole level of debate,"—put problems in perspective, and produced judgments accepted by the whole people.

Two Senators, O'Mahoney (D., Wyo.) and Mundt (R., S. Dak.), indicated the desirability of establishing such a commission providing its functions were limited to an inquiry into the internal security of the United States and the menace of the fifth column of communism.

A fourth Senator, Malone (R., Nev.) contended that it was clear that President Truman had already appointed the best man he could to handle the field that the commission might tackle, and that there was little likelihood he could find more competent ones to put on a commission itself.

Their comments came in the course of a radio and television discussion of The Washington Post's editorial, in which Post publisher Philip L. Graham participated. The program was NBC's "American Forum of the Air."

Graham, who gave a brief outline of what Theodore Granik, producer of the program, called the Post's "dramatic editorial" of last

Sen. Graham Leads; May Face Runoff

Interim Appointee Is Ahead of Smith By 33,000 in 1666 Of 1990 Precincts

Raleigh, N. C., May 27 (U.P.). Fair Dealer Senator Frank P. Graham (D., N. C.) built up a firm lead tonight in returns from the North Carolina Democratic primary but he may face a runoff with Willis Smith, conservative lawyer, in his bid for a four-year Senate term.

Returns from 1666 of the State's 1990 precincts gave Graham 237,354 votes, Smith 204,341, former Senator Robert R. Reynolds 45,404 and Olla Ray Boyd 4611.

The support picked up by Reynolds, an outspoken isolationist when he was in the Senate, intervened in the test between the pro-Truman policies advocated by Graham and Smith's "anti-Socialism" platform.

Reynolds not only was denying Graham a clear majority in the late vote-counting but most observers believed he would cast his support to Smith in a runoff on June 24 if one is necessary.

The bitter campaign in which Graham vowed support of most of President Truman's policies brought out voters in record numbers.

A victory for Graham would make the Administration even-up in the Southern elections. Representative Smathers (D., Fla.) recently unseated Fair Dealer Senator Claude Pepper in the Florida primary. As in Florida, Democratic nomination in North Carolina assures election.

Graham has generally stuck to Mr. Truman's political philosophy, although he filed a minority dissenting report as a member of the FEPC Commission several years ago. He had been charged by Smith with left-wing tendencies.

Under-Cover Campaign

Smith, a corporation lawyer, was pictured by Graham as an opponent of labor, in this most industrialized of Southern States, and a block to progress.

The race issue here was waged, in the main, under cover. In one instance, falsely signed postcards citing Graham as a friend of the Negro were mailed throughout the State, to white voters.

Reynolds waged a quiet campaign, in comparison to those before he voluntarily retired as the war began. Boyd admitted he wanted only the publicity which was cheap at the $125 entry fee.

Graham was appointed to the Senate by Gov. Kerr Scott, in March, 1949, on the death of Senator J. Melville Broughton. Today's primary was to fill the seat for the remaining four years of Broughton's term.

Two Perish in London Hospital Blast, Fire

London, May 27 (U.P.).—A doctor and a nurse were burned to death today in a fire that swept the basement and two lower floors of Brompton Hospital, after an unexplained explosion in the X-ray department.

More than 100 patients and other persons were evacuated safely, but police reported that Dr. Gerard Channel, 39, and nurse Evelyn Roberts, 31, were trapped and killed.

Expansion Of Armories Advocated

$9 Million Program Sought for Reserve, Guard in Virginia, Maryland and D. C.

By John G. Norris
Post Reporter

Special military survey boards have found that National Guard and Reserve armories here and in more than a score Maryland and Virginia cities and towns are inadequate and recommended a nine-million-dollar expansion program.

They propose building a new Army Reserve armory in Washington and enlargement and rehabilitation of existing structures at several neighboring Maryland towns.

The survey—part of a Nationwide move—was made on Pentagon orders to help establish priorities for construction of training facilities for the civilian components of the Army, Navy, Air Force and Marine Corps under a 400-million-dollar armory bill now before Congress. Passage of the measure is confidently predicted during this session, as the Administration-sponsored program has passed the Senate and is scheduled for early House action.

Actual appropriations for the building program would have to come later and would be spread over several years, but an undisclosed amount is earmarked in the 1951 budget to start the project and is expected to be voted in a supplemental spending bill this year.

Fairly High on List

While priorities have not been finally established, Col. Alva L. Fenn of the Pentagon Civilian Components Board told The Washington Post that the additional armory for the District of Columbia stands fairly high on the tentative list.

It is believed to have a good chance of being included in the '51 or '52 programs.

No site has been selected as yet, nor plans drawn, it was said. But Fenn declared that it would be of brick and tile or brick and concrete and be of a "utilitarian" rather than "monumental" type. A building of just under 40,000 square feet was originally planned and the cost was estimated then at $578,704.

However, since then two factors have entered the situation: estimated building costs were revised downward; and the Marine Corps Reserve picture here has changed.

When the District of Columbia board met quietly some time ago to survey the local reserve situation, the Marine reservists were scheduled to be allocated a building at a local naval reservation.

The three-man group—consisting of Lieut. Col. Thomas A. Brown, Army; Comdr. Hugh H. Lewis, Navy, and Maj. W. E. May, Air Force—then concluded that the Army National Guard was well taken care of, that Navy surface and air units were in pretty good shape, the Marines could manage with what was planned, but that the Army Organized Reserve was sadly lacking in facilities.

Space Not Available

Bolling Air Force Base was unable to handle any Air National Guard or Air Reserve activities, so a joint meeting was held with the Maryland board. That group—made up of Lieut. Col. Harry D.

Labor Hopes Wane as Barden Takes Reins Lesinski Held

(Obituary of Representative John Lesinski, Page 14)

By Sam Stavisky
Post Reporter

Labor leaders' dwindling hopes for favorable House action on any labor legislation in the current session of Congress virtually expired yesterday with the death of Representative John Lesinski (D., Mich.).

A strong champion of labor, Mr. Lesinski will be succeeded as chairman of the House Labor and Education Committee by Representative Graham A. Barden (D., N.C.), considered by union chiefs as antilabor.

The 54-year-old North Carolinian is regarded a "progressive" by Southern standards, a "conservative" by Fair Deal standards, and an independent, middle of the roader by himself.

Contacted by phone at his home in New Bern, N. C., where he participated in yesterday's primaries, Representative Barden told The Washington Post:

"I'm not for or against anything, except what I believe to be good for all the people."

Barden said that he had "no foolish idea" of running the 25-member Labor-Education Committee as if he were "the boss."

"Nobody need expect a revolution in the way the committee has been operating," he asserted.

Nonetheless, labor leaders look to Barden's chairmanship with dismay. They say that Barden's record on labor issues is almost 100 percent "anti-labor"—from the point of view of the unions. A chairman of a House committee has important powers, such as to permit the speeding up of legislation he prefers, or to place blocks in the way of bills he doesn't like.

Labor leaders have no intention of attempting to block Barden's appointment to the committee chairmanship. They feel it would be a useless gesture in face of the tradition of succession by seniority. But the union heads will urge the Administration to appoint a "liberal" Democrat to the committee vacancy.

Up to now the pro-labor members of the committee have held a thin 13-12 majority over the Republican-Southern Democrat coalition. Barden was generally looked upon as a member of the latter group. Unless another pro-labor Democrat is added to the committee, the union leaders realize they'll have to give up the ghost altogether on legislation they want the committee to pass.

Among the pro-labor bills presently stymied in the committee are the labor extension service measure and legislation to permit unions to maintain hiring halls, now

Truman Calls Talks 'Best Since Potsdam' As He Meets Acheson

President Truman greets Secretary of State and Mrs. Acheson

Secretary Praises Work of Advisers At Conference, Cooper and Jessup

By Marshall Andrews
Post Reporter

Secretary of State Acheson returned from Big Three talks at London yesterday to receive from President Truman congratulations on "the most successful meeting since Potsdam."

It was at Potsdam that Mr. Truman, who had just stepped into the Presidency, arranged details of Russia's part in the war against Japan. Surrender of the Japanese a month later was based on terms dictated at Potsdam.

Secretary Acheson arrived at National Airport in the President's airplane, the Independence, which had flown him and his party down from New York. He and the others with him were ruddy with sun-tans acquired on their sea voyage back from Europe.

Greeted at Ramp

When Acheson stepped down the high ramp, followed by Mrs. Acheson, he was met by Mr. Truman, who shook hands cordially and clapped him on the shoulder. They stood for some time in the blazing sun to be photographed over and over, just the two of them together, and then with Mrs. Acheson, with former Republican Senator John Sherman Cooper and with other members of the party.

Mr. Truman, who postponed a trip down the Potomac in the Presidential yacht Williamsburg to welcome his Secretary of State, was clad in a light tan suit with a lighter hat and maroon tie. Looking exceptionally fit and smiling on everyone, the President told reporters:

"I never felt better and had less."

After greeting Acheson at the foot of the ramp and posing for "just one more," Mr. Truman adjourned to a microphone set up before a battery of newsreel cameras. There he shook hands with Acheson again and said:

"I congratulate you, Mr. Secretary, on your most successful trip and meeting. I think it was the most successful one that's happened since Potsdam."

Acheson Praises Aides

"Thank you, Mr. President," replied Acheson. "I am very deeply touched that you should have come out here to meet me. We tried to carry out your instructions to the best of our ability.

"The two stalwarts who are standing here helped me tremendously."

The "stalwarts" were Cooper, recently named special consultant to

West Berlin Defenders Ready As Rally of 500,000 Reds Nears

Berlin, May 27 (NYHT).—All was relatively quiet tonight along the 103-mile east-west front in Berlin, and there were no indications that the Communists will try to carry out their original threat to seize the city's western sectors during their Whitsunday rally of 500,000 youths.

Thirteen thousand West German police, backed by 8000 American, British and French troops, stood ready to defend West Berlin in the event the calm which prevails tonight should turn into a storm Sunday.

The three Western Allied commandants held final meetings today to complete defense plans. Each will direct his own forces from separate command posts, closely co-ordinated for joint action.

Military leaves have been suspended and most of the Allied forces are being held in barracks on an alert basis. Several British armored cars and military police are patrolling near the Brandenburg Gate, which is the most sensitive East-West border point since it overlooks the site of the scheduled Freie Deutsche Jugend (Free German Youth) rally.

An American helicopter and a British reconnaissance plane are being used to spot any disturbances which may develop. They circled the city hundreds of times today, but found no extraordinary preparations.

East and West German leaders addressed their respective sides on the eve of the Communist rally. East Berlin Mayor Friedrich Ebert, eldest son of the first president of the German (Weimar) Republic, "We are not going to storm Berlin as we have been accused by the western powers. Our enemies will

East Germans' Desertions Plague Red Berlin Bosses

Berlin, May 27 (AP).—Flights by East Germans into West Berlin plagued the Communist bosses of East Germany tonight.

Staging the biggest youth demonstration here since the Hitler era, the Communists found some of their unwilling followers were slipping away from them in increasing numbers to the freedom of Allied-occupied West Berlin.

The desertions increased, despite tightened border controls. Leading the deserters were members of the Communist-controlled "People's Police." Since the youth demonstration began three days ago, 35 members of the "People's Police" have sought asylum in Berlin.

U. S. Orders Czechs to Shut N. Y. Consulate

Note Tells of Decision To Close American Office in Bratislava

The United States yesterday ordered Czechoslovakia to close its New York consulate-general by June 10 in reprisal for anti-American acts of the Prague government.

Two weeks ago this country ordered Czech diplomatic personnel in the United States reduced by two-thirds, closing consulates at Cleveland and Pittsburgh and lopping 10 people from the New York staff.

Friday the United States restricted travel of Romanian Embassy personnel to an area within 35 miles of Washington. This move was in retaliation for restrictions imposed upon United States diplomatic personnel in Romania.

U. S. Closes Bratislava Post

In yesterday's note this country informed Czechoslovakia the United States consulate at Bratislava would be closed. This action anticipated a Czech order which would have been made necessary by an earlier demand that American diplomatic personnel in that country be reduced to a total of 12.

The United States made it clear that the two moves ordered in yesterday's note were not aimed at the Czech people but at the Soviet-dominated Communist government. This country, said the note, "has continuing confidence in the good will and traditional feeling of friendship of the people of Czechoslovakia toward the United States despite the efforts of the Czechoslovak government to sever friendly contacts between the American and Czechoslovak peoples."

The United States not only rejected "once more, the allegations (of espionage) the Czechoslovak government has put forward as a

Rep. Scott Sees Successful Draft Of Eisenhower

Former Republican National Chairman Hugh D. Scott, jr., predicted yesterday that Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower will be "drafted" as the GOP presidential candidate for 1952.

Scott, a Republican Congressman from Pennsylvania and a supporter of Thomas E. Dewey in the 1948 convention, said Eisenhower will find it "impossible" to refuse the draft.

In a radio interview Scott said the Republican Party's first job is to win control of Congress in this year's elections.

Publicist Booms "Ike"

New York, May 27 (AP).—A paid advertising campaign to "draft Eisenhower for President" has been started by a New York publicity man.

The first advertisement appeared in last night's edition of the New York Herald Tribune in the public notices column.

The publicist, John Orr Young, said he started a similar campaign in 1940 for the late Wendell L. Willkie.

Young said the notices will blossom into large advertisements in newspapers and magazines as contributions from Eisenhower backers roll in.

Lookout Broadcast

Bolling Base Sergeant Sought In Brutal Slaying of Cabbie

Police broadcast a lookout yesterday for a 28-year-old Bolling Air Force Base sergeant in connection with the early morning murder at the base of a young Government worker who also drove a cab part-time.

Gordon C. Brown, jr., 24, 224 Carmody Hills dr., Carmody Hills, Md., was shot to death at the south end of Bolling Field at 2 a. m. He died in the Base hospital more than two hours after he was found moaning on a grass plot about 30 feet from his cab.

Bolling Office of Special Investigation agents and Police Homicide Squad detectives shut down the Base at 5 a. m. and began checking all Air Force personnel who had had overnight passes, and all base firearms.

Late yesterday, a lookout was broadcast for a Bolling airman, who had not checked in at the base since 2 a. m. Investigators also "wanted to talk" to six others.

"These men are not necessarily suspects," Col. Kirby Gillette, head of the OSI on the Base said. "Some of them have checked off the base legally since the shooting."

Police homicide detective last night said they were "making progress."

"We are not by any means at a dead end at this point," one reported.

Brown's Eastern Cab No. 172 was logged past the Main Gate sentry at 1:50 a. m. His passenger was unidentified and the three sentries are unable to swear he had a passenger.

The three guards were identified as Corpl. Bernard McGehee, 21, of Goochland, Va.; Pfc. Charles A. Trivette, 22, of Mooresville, N. C., and Corpl. Joseph T. Geary,

6 GOP Southerners Accused of Sellout

His Ears Tick, Its's No Trick

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

SANKEY FLYNN, 31-year-old Greensboro, N. C., loom fixer, finds himself in a fix. Doctors say that he's the only one in the world with double objective tinnitus aurium. He says that it means both his ears tick all the time. He won't submit to an operation, and he says that for all he cares his ears can just go on ticking for the rest of his life

NYHT News Service

Representative Hugh D. Scott, jr. (R., Pa.), former chairman of the Republican National Committee, accused the top Republican officials of six Southern States last night of "selling their party down the river for patronage, power and personal advantage."

Scott named Republican National Committeemen of Tennessee, Texas, Louisiana, Alabama, Mississippi and South Carolina, whom he accused of such a sellout of their own party.

Among those he named in a radio interview was B. Carroll Reece, of Tennessee, also a former Republican National Chairman and his party's nominee for Senator in 1948.

Scott accused Reece of having had a political "alliance" with the Democratic machine of Ed Crump, adding: "Reece is Republican National Committeeman and yet he publishes a Democratic newspaper in Bristol."

The other national committeemen criticized in similar vein were: R. B. Creager, of Texas; John E. Jackson, of Louisiana; Perry W. Howard, of Mississippi; B. L. Noojin, of Alabama, and Bates Gerald, of South Carolina.

Scott accused them in varying degrees of playing a political ball with the Democrats, of deliberately keeping the Republican organizations of their own states "small and ineffective" and of blocking Republican efforts to create a real two-party system in the South.

On the other hand, he praised the National Committeemen and other party leaders in four Southern States — Virginia, Florida, Georgia and Arkansas—for making a sincere attempt to rebuild the party in their states. He noted that "Virginia did better for the Republicans in 1948 than some Midwestern States."

He called for such a "fight" throughout the South "to give to the millions of Southerners who are anti-Truman and who are seeking some outlet other than the race-conscious Dixiecrats a real voice in the government of their country."

Agriculture Bill Failure Explained

By John W. Ball
Post Reporter

Two reasons were advanced the past week for the defeat of reorganization of the Department of Agriculture.

1. According to Senator Clinton P. Anderson (D., N. Mex.) former Secretary of Agriculture, in a radio broadcast to New Mexico, "the answer is that the executive staff didn't clear enough of these programs with the responsible people prior to their submission to Congress."

Brannan's Use Feared

2. According to Senator George D. Aiken (R., Vt.) majority leader of the Senate Agriculture Committee, Congress was afraid Secretary of Agriculture Charles F. Brannan would use the law to restrict some agencies. He said many feared that Brannan would trim the Extension Service.

Anderson's remarks were made last night at the close of a radio interview for New Mexico consumption with Senator Arthur Watkins (R., Utah). The interview had to do with the operation of the recently-enacted Navajo-Hopi Rehabilitation bill, which will establish programs calling for about 90 million dollars for the two tribes. Watkins and Anderson were named by Vice President Alben W. Barkley to a Senate watchdog committee to watch administration of the new law.

Aiken's remarks came during a meeting with a group of Ohio Farm Bureau members who visited Washington to discuss farm legislation with the Ohio delegation.

Senate Rough on Plans

"About these reorganization plans," Anderson said, "the Senate has been batting some of them down pretty regularly. It's been supporting the great majority, but some of them have gone down by overwhelming majorities, such as the vote the other day, 58 to 1.

"People sort of wonder why so many of those plans are defeated Maybe I can give you a tip. I think the answer is that the executive staff didn't clear enough of these programs with the responsible people prior to their submission to Congress.

"I don't think Senator McClellan of Arkansas was consulted before a single reorganization plan was submitted to his committee."

Labor Hopes Dimmed

banned under the Taft-Hartley Act.

In many ways Representatives Lesinski and Barden were opposites. The former was a poor speaker and manager, the latter is an excellent orator and a shrewd parliamentarian. As chairman of the old Education Committee, he's experienced in dealing with controversial issues.

But like his predecessor, Representative Barden can be stubborn. The two Congressmen squared off uncompromisingly on the issue of Federal aid to education. Representative Lesinski wanted to give parochial schools aid for the school buses, and Representative Barden insisted that parochial schools get no aid from public funds. Both voted down the Senate legislation which would leave the issue up to the individual States.

Some members of the House Labor Committee believe that the new chairman will grant Representative Andrew Jacobs (D., Ind.) the authority to subpena John L. Lewis before the Jacobs subcommittee investigating undemocratic practices in labor unions.

Jacobs had announced he was ordering the United Mine Workers president to appear for questioning by the subcommittee when Chairman Lesinski balked the move by withdrawing subpena powers.

Yesterday, Representative Barden indicated he probably would let the full committee decide the Lewis subpena issue.

A native of Turkey Township, N. C., Representative Barden was born September 25, 1896. He served in the Navy in World War I, earned his law degree at the University of North Carolina in 1920. He taught high school for a year, served three terms as county judge and was elected to the State General Assmbly in 1933.

Married and father of two children, Representative Barden is currently serving his ninth term in Congress.

Gold Cooperating With FBI Now, Newspaper Says

Philadelphia, May 27 (AP).—Harry Gold, 39-year-old chemist held on a charge of wartime espionage, now says he must have been insane to help betray his country's atomic bomb secrets to Russia, the Sunday Bulletin stated tonight.

The Bulletin said Gold, held under $100,000 bail, represents himself as fully penitent.

Accused of being the "contact man" for convicted British scientist-spy Dr. Klaus Fuchs, Gold says, according to the Bulletin, that the FBI agents questioning him daily in his cell are getting all the help he can give in their efforts to track down others of the Soviet atomic spy ring.

The newspaper quotes Gold as saying:

"Now I want to help my country all I can. I will do everything possible, tell everything I know."

The paper added:

"Gold is unable to give the names of any agents with whom he dealt. He knew them only by code number or code name. This, investigators say, is recognized as part of the mechanics of espionage operation."

Aryan or Jew Still Used in German Hotel

Frankfurt, Germany, May 27 (U.P.). Overnight guests at the Brinkmeier Hotel in Flensburg still fill out a Nazi register asking whether they are Aryan or Jew, the newspaper Frankfurter Rundschau reported today.

The hotel is using old register books printed before the war, the newspaper explained, and German guests are filling out the "Aryan—non-Aryan" column without protest.

Tall Cedars of Lebanon Romp Through District in Parade

By Harry Goodwin—The Washington Post

ATLANTIC CITY FOREST NO. 11 MARCHES PAST CONSTITUTION AVENUE REVIEWING STAND

Horseplay had its heyday on Constitution ave. yesterday as the Tall Cedars of Lebanon capered through a two-hour parade.

Clowns, bands and zany floats provided laughs and resounidng music to climax the forty-eighth Supreme Forest, National Convention of the Masonic fun organization.

The crowd itself felt the antics firsthand with such features as a clown coming up behind the womenfolk and dropping a huge black made-up spider over their shoulders.

Police said between 75,000 and 100,000 persons saw the procession and that 3652 marchers, 33 bands and 23 floats participated.

In session earlier in the day at the Mayflower Hotel the Tall Cedars elected William F. Schmidt of Richmond Forest No. 66, Staten Island, N. Y., as Supreme Tall Cedar.

John H. McFaul of Baltimore Forest No. 45, was named Senior Deputy Supreme Tall Cedar and William E. Reichert of Bethlehem, Pa., Forest No. 61, Junior Deputy.

Atlantic City, N. J., was chosen as site of next year's convention.

The convention will conclude with services at 9 a. m. today in the Mount Vernon Place Methodist Church, 9th st. and Massachusetts ave. nw.

A hot sun beamed down on the parade but many white-haired, tuxedoed men walked the long blocks without wilting entirely.

Marching choruses sang out the philosophy of the Tall Cedars with "Smile, Darn You, Smile," and "We'll Sing Our Song of Cheer—And Drive Away All Tears."

Noisy Procession

Blank-cartridge pistols and throbbing jalopies kept the air filled with noise.

Tall Cedars in red plus fours, green jackets and yellow pyramid hats filled it with color.

Men from Mars threw out flying saucers — paper pie plates. Songs like "Comin' Thru the Rye" and "When You and I Were Young, Maggie," sounded from the bands.

A special hit with the crowd was "The Singing Miners" from Pottsville, Pa., wearing overalls, red bandanas and miners' lamps. A kiltie bagpipe band from Manchester, Conn., also made a big hit.

Capitol Forest No. 104 of Washington won two prizes in the parade competition, taking a third in the comics division and a second in the floats. The first prize winners follow:

Band—Trenton, N. J., Forest No. 4; bugle corps, Baltimore Forest No. 45; ranger unit, Harrisburg, Pa., No. 43; Comics, Westchester No. 22, and floats, Schuylkill No. 50, Pottsville, Pa.

Violation Of T-H Law Laid to Union

By The Associated Press

A National Labor Relations Board trial examiner yesterday found that John L. Lewis' United Mine Workers violated the Taft-Hartley Act by "invasion and seizure" of six nonunion mines in Kentucky last year.

In each case, Examiner Charles L. Ferguson said, the invading forces were preceded by a county sheriff and a captain of the Kentucky State patrol.

2000 in Caravan

The examiner said the UMW and its District 23 had about 2000 men traveling from mine to mine in a caravan of 200 cars, trucks and buses to enter mine property, round up nonunion workers, threaten them and force them to leave their jobs.

The activity occurred during a coal strike last June 29 and 30.

Ferguson recommended that the union, its District 23, and Union Officers Edward Morgan, Earl Suver and Arthur Chaney be required to cease the alleged illegal activity and to post notices promising not to repeat it.

The UMW caravan toured the six mines in Union and Hopkins Counties in western Kentucky, near Madisonville. The mines are operated by the West Kentucky Coal Co., Colonial Coal Mining Co., Homestead Coal Co., Badgett Mine Stripping Corp. and the Poplar Ridge Coal Co.

The Kentucky State court issued an injunction against the union and caravan leaders, but the nonunion workers were idle about 10 days. The union did not offer any evidence to refute the charges, Ferguson said.

Here is the pattern which Ferguson said was followed at the six mines during the "invasion" as summarized by the NLRB:

"The UMW force, usually estimated at 2000 men, parked their motor vehicles along roads near the mine properties, marched to the mine office and demanded that the mine officials call together all employes. In each instance, the UMW caravan was preceded by the sheriff of the county in which the mine was located and a captain from the Kentucky State patrol.

"These officers, when asked by mine officials, advised the mine officials that it would be best to shut down the mines and summon their employes in order to avoid 'violence and property damage.'"

Ease Political Reins, Tsaldaris Urges U. S.

Athens, May 27 (U.P.)—Opposition leader Constantin Tsaldaris today urged that America give Greece more freedom in political and economic affairs, now that the Greek guerilla war is ended.

Tsaldaris, Foreign Minister and head of the right-wing Populist Party, said a "greater emancipation" from American advice would restore Greece's self-confidence and enhance cordial relations between the two countries.

Armory Expansion Program Urged for D. C., Nearby States

Tyson, Comdr. Clifford A. Johnson, Navy, and Capt. Gerald A. Schori, Air Force—proposed a $32,000 expansion of facilities for the D. C. Air Guard at Andrews AM Base. It was informed that space was not available at Andrews for an Air Reserve training center.

Now the Marines will not get their Navy building and find that considerable money must be spent if they are to keep on occupying their temporary, privately owned quarters at the Boys' Club. So the Washington board was reconvened last week to resurvey the situation.

Officials said it is possible that a larger armory than that planned for the Army Reserve may be recommended for joint occupancy by the Army and Marine reservists. Due to large civilian use of the existing D. C. National Guard Armory and plans for the Sesquicentennial, that structure was considered unavailable.

The Maryland board recommended construction or expansion totaling $6,750,000 throughout the State. Spending the following amounts at existing National Guard armories at the following locations in the Washington area was proposed: Annapolis, $75,800; Centreville, $96,440; Cumberland, $88,937; Frederick, $69,343; Greenbelt, $96,768; Hagerstown, $55,313; Hyattsville, $44,598; Kensington, $4598; LaPlata, $96,768; Laurel, $44,598; Leonardtown $96,768; Silver Spring, $44,598.

The Virginia board—now made up of Capt. W. J. O'Brien, Navy; Maj. James A. Ward, jr., Army, and Maj. W. E. May, Air Force—proposed $2,036,880 in armory construction over the State. Included were a $358,000 new armory for Charlottesville and one costing $462,000 at Roanoke.

Officials, however, noted that these cost estimates are not firm—due to lowered building estimates and to the fact that the two new Virginia armories and expansion of those at Cumberland, Frederick and Hagerstown were for use by Army Reserve units. A resurvey of the entire Army Reserve troop unit program has been under way and some units are being eliminated.

Cat With Wings Intrigues Madrid, But Cannot Fly

Madrid, May 27 (U.P.).—Hundreds of persons stormed the home of Juan and Victoria Priego today in the hope of seeing their cat which appears to have wings.

When some of the curious attempted to surge through the kitchen door, Mrs. Priego beat them off with a stick. It has been like that at the Priego apartment ever since Thursday when a Madrid newspaper published a photograph of the cat.

The cause of her trouble was Angolina, a cat, which lay with what seemed to be wings folded against her body in the Priego basement kitchen. Doctors who examined the cat attested that the wings are real, a form of cartilage. When stretched, they measure about 10 inches. But the cat cannot fly.

Oxnam Proposes Consolidation of All Protestants

Bloomfield, N. J., May 27 (AP).—Consolidation of all Protestant churches on a community level was recommended today by Methodist Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam of New York.

"The over-all plan," Bishop Oxnam said, "would involve, for instance, Methodist becoming Presbyterians in a community in which the Presbyterians outnumber the Methodist and, concurrently, the Presbyterians of another community becoming Methodists where the Methodists are in the majority."

Speaking at the 93d annual meeting of the Newark Conference of the Methodist Church, Bishop Oxnam rejected the idea of "federated" or "union" churches.

Rocket Plane Expected to Do 1700 M.P.H.

The Air Force says it will begin flight tests early next year of a tiny rocket plane designed to hit a top speed of 1700 miles an hour.

The plane is the X-1A, a successor to the faster-than-sound X-1. Like its forerunner, it is a product of the Bell Aircraft Corporation, Niagara Falls, N. Y.

The X-1 itself was designed to have a top speed of 1700 miles an hour. But design problems delayed completion of the turbine-driven fuel pump that was supposed to force alcohol and liquid oxygen into its engine. Instead of this pump, nitrogen gas under pressure was used to drive fuel into the rocket motors.

How fast the X-1 went with this substitute fuel delivery system has never been disclosed officially. Prior to flight tests, its top speed was estimated at 1000 miles an hour at an altitude of more than 11 miles.

During the tests, which were completed early this month at Muroc, Calif., the Air Force announced the plane had traveled faster than sound repeatedly. Sound travels 763 miles an hour at sea level and slightly less than that at higher altitudes. Reports that the X-1 reached 1700 miles an hour were not confirmed officially.

Now the Air Force says the X-1A will be equipped with a turbine driven fuel pump which should give improved performance.

With such a fuel pump, the little research plane is designed to fly at top speed of 1700 miles an hour 15 miles above the earth.

9000 Aircraft Observation Posts Set Up in Defense Plan

Selection of 9000 observation posts has completed the first phase of the Nation's civilian defense program, the Defense Department said yesterday.

The observation posts, to be manned by trained civilians in event of air attack, are located approximately eight miles apart and are scattered through 25 States covering generally the northern half of the United States and the East and West Coasts.

The distance of eight miles apart was set because a person normally can see about four miles in ordinary daylight in most parts of the country.

A Defense spokesman said all but a few of the observation posts have been selected and most of the chief observers have been named.

Each post is to have a chief observer, two assistant observers, and 20 other civilian volunteers to make certain that it coud be manned 24 hours a day if necessary.

The program is civilian—operated and manned, but the volunteers will be trained by the Air Force which also coordinates the program with State Governors.

Setting up 9000 aircraft observation posts indicates that the Defense Department is trying to make the aircraft observation network as tight as possible. 200,000 civilian volunteers will be enrolled.

The program also calls for setting up 26 filter stations to which observers will telephone information about unidentified planes.

The purpose of the program is to supplement the Air Force's radar network now being set up in coastal States, Alaska, and Canada.

The civilian network will help the Air Force count low-flying aircraft, identify them, and trace their direction all the way across the country.

Textile Union To Seek Increase

Boston, May 27 (U.P.).—The CIO Textile Workers Union of America will make an all-out drive for wage increases and pensions for its 80,000 members in woolen and worsted industries when current contracts expire February 1, 1951, it was announced today.

Emil Rieve, president of the TWUA, said the union had decided to waive a contract reopening on August 1 of this year because wage demands would have been subject to arbitration if the parties could not agree.

Rieve said the decisions were approved unanimously at a wage conference of 300 delegates representing 175 TWUA woolen and worsted mills.

The Post's National Celebrities Golf Tournament and the Bob Hope Show are coming this Saturday, so you only have a few days in which to get your tickets. Remember to get yours tomorrow.

Red Mission Leaves Japan Suddenly

Associated Press WIREPHOTO
GEN. KUZMA DEREVYANKO
. . . Heads for Moscow

Tokyo (Sunday) May 28 (AP).—Forty-nine topranking members of the Russian mission left hastily for Moscow yesterday. Some observers believe it foreshadows a stronger Soviet drive in Southeast Asia.

Lieut. Gen. Kuzma Derevyanko, Russia's leading veteran on postwar affairs in Asia, headed the departing group. He took with him his major policy advisers.

The Russians sailed from Tokyo Bay on Soviet Trawler 284 for the Siberian port of Vladivostok. The time of their departure, first reported as Sunday morning, was confirmed by a Soviet mission spokesman.

Informed sources said General MacArthur was told in advance of the departure, but that it was "unusually short notice." They sailed on the same vessel that brought in 35 Russian replacements, described by informants as very junior military men.

These sources said MacArthur's headquarters did not interpret the surprise move as any precautionary withdrawal against the possible danger to mission personnel in Japan. They speculated on these two conflicting theories:

First, Moscow is withdrawing its experts in the Far East who are also experts on United States military forces in Japan in preparation for new pressure on Southeast Asia.

Second, Derevyanko is being recalled for failure to build in Japan, through indoctrinated Japanese repatriates, the core of a disruptive guerilla force such as in Indo-China and elsewhere in Asia.

(Washington could shed no light on the maneuver. State and Defense officials said it was news to them.)

Red Plan Seen To Wreck Aid For Refugees

Lake Success, N. Y., May 27 (NYHT).—A Communist drive to sow trouble among refugees—both in European camps and here in the United States—was authoritatively reported today to be under way, complete with a reputed blueprint for making trouble.

J. Donald Kingsley, director general of the International Refugee Organization, said a Communist offensive was seeking to "discourage a peaceful solution of the refugee problem." But he said the IRO had "met" this drive in its camps, and that the drive there had "failed."

Besides the IRO-aided displaced persons, however, there are some 8,500,000 refugees and expellees now in West Germany as fugitives from Soviet-dominated areas, of whom some two million live in camps under control of the West German Federal Republic. There are some 280,000 D. P's. in about 300 IRO camps, and about 300,000 more D. P. eligibles outside, who are receiving legal and political protection or hoping for new homes.

The reputed blueprint for trouble was described as instructions to a since-unmasked Communist agent in a European refugee camp. It said:

"It is essential to provoke quarrels concerning economic and social conditions among the groups of refugees of various nationalities—also among the different political groups.

"It is essential to paralyze the cultural activity of the refugees. To achieve this it is necessary to get ignorant individuals to demand leading positions.

"It is necessary to provoke scandals, so that it might be said that the refugees are an unworthy group. It is also necessary to widen the chasm between the individual denominations and religious organizations.

"It is necessary in every way to belittle the refugees in the eyes of the representatives of those countries which would be willing to allow their immigration, particularly Canada, U. S. A., Argentine and Brazil.

"It is necessary to lower their economic foundation to the lowest possible level: It should be arranged that there should be criminal cases in the camps as often as possible. It is essential to breed common distrust and suspicion between the refugees on the one hand and the administration of the camp on the other.

"The best means to do this is to force the administration of the camp and the police to deal unjustly with the refugees. In this way they will arouse discontent and the police intervention will only worsen the entire situation.

"Those refugees who could be dangerous to the Communists must be silenced and the leading positions must be taken either by individuals who can be useful to us or by unintelligent, uneducated people. Eventual friendship between the refugees and foreigners must be changed into open hostility. The refugees must be convinced that the western allies are their enemies."

D. C. Girl Killed As Car Overturns On Md. Highway

Miss Kay A. Clines, 18-year-old typist, was killed yesterday when a car she was driving overturned near Prince Frederick, Md. She lived with her grandmother, Mrs. Edna Murray, at 3509 14th st. nw.

Also surviving are her mother, Mrs. Helen Scott, 2316 F st. nw.; her father, Wiliam Clines of Denver, and two brothers, Patrick in Los Angeles and William, jr., in Denver.

In a local accident, Police Pvt. Vincent Lusby of the Fifth Precinct was bruised when he was brushed off the running board of a car, which he had stopped for investigation. He was treated at Providence Hospital.

Tass Says Remington Buys Jap Arms Plant Control

London, May 27 (U.P.).—The Russian news agency Tass today reported that the Japanese Nippon Heiki Arms Co., has sold more than half its shares to the American Remington Arms Co., which has been manufacturing arms in Japanese factories.

Radio Moscow quoted Tass as saying that two of the Nippon Heiki plants in Yokosuka have been modernized "and have already produced their first batch of rifles and automatic arms to American specifications. The first consignment of these arms had been delivered to American arms dumps in Japan."

Tass said "the arms produced are intended for rearming the Japanese army and navy."

Acheson Met By Truman

the Secretary, and Ambassador-at-Large Philip C. Jessup.

Acheson is expected to make his formal report to President Truman on Monday, followed by a report to Congress in joint session on Wednesday.

The State Department also announced four major speeches scheduled by the Secretary during the coming month. He will speak at Southern Methodist University, Dallas, on June 13; before the Governors' Conference at White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., on June 20; at Harvard University on June 22, and before the American Newspaper Guild Convention Here on June 29.

Among the notables who turned out to greet Acheson and his party were Ambassador Henri Bonnet of France, who saw him off May 6, and four Cabinet members. These were Agriculture Secretary Brannan, Interior Secretay Chapman, Postmaster General Donaldson and Commerce Secretary Sawyer.

The Independence, scheduled to arrive at 3 p. m., touched down exactly on time and at 3:02 its door was open and the ramp in place.

In a shipboard press conference at New York, Acheson spoke with high optimism of the results of the London and Paris talks.

"I feel," he said, "that steps taken in common with other free nations of the West represent solid achievement moving along the road to peace. We are strong materially and spiritually and are gaining military strength. We shall continue to maintain that progress and that unity."

Answering questions, the Secretary said he did not believe recent restrictions on Czechoslovakian and Romanian diplomatic personnel in the United States would result in a break in relations with those countries. He was optimistic also that aid to the Bao Dai regime in Indo-China would prevent capture by communism of that vital area.

Acheson said the question of Germany's role in western Europe was discussed fully with representatives of all small Atlantic Pact countries and he felt there was no residue of ill-feeling toward the Germans. He felt hopeful, he said, that Yugoslavia and Italy would be able to reach an agreement on Trieste.

Leaving the airport, Acheson drove with Mr. Truman to the Naval Gun Factory to spend a few moments with the President aboard the Williamsburg. Then he motored to his home in Georgetown.

Germans Honor Russian Dead

AT SOVIET MEMORIAL—More than 3000 members of the Communist-inspired Free German Youth brigades gathered about the Soviet War Memorial in Berlin for a wreath-laying ceremony yesterday. GERMANY—From Pg. 1 have to realize that they are in a hopeless situation."

West Berlin Mayor Ernest Reuter told his people to remain calm and assured them that the Communists would never succeed in seizing the western sectors, even if they should try.

Headquarters of the F. D. J. asserted tonight that it had succeeded in mobilizing 500,000 East German youths from all parts of Germany. At 4 a. m. they will begin forming lines for an eight-hour parade, which will start at 9 a. m.

The parade will be reviewed by President Wilhelm Pieck of the East German People's (Communist) Republic and other Communist leaders.

Joining them in the rally for the Soviet Union and against the western powers will be representatives of 21 countries—Russia, China, Czechoslovakia, Poland, Bulgaria, Hungary, Albania, Romania, Sweden, Norway, Denmark, Finland Great Britain, France, Italy, Greece Spain, the Netherlands, Austria, Australia, and the United States.

Though the official slogan of the rally is "Peace," large propaganda posters along the Unter den Linden emphasize the theme of love for the Soviet Union and militant struggle against the Western powers.

Under a portrait of Prime Minister Stalin, draped with red flags and blue banners, one of the principal posters bears the legend, "The Wise Leader of the World Peace Movement."

The United States is portrayed by a picture of men and women sleeping in the streets. The caption reads, "Behind the skyscraper facade there is mass misery, race instigation and suppression of progressive forces."

Another slogan suggests that the Communists have not yet abandoned their aspirations in Greece. It reads: "The resistance of Greek patriots means that the Greek army will be revived again."

These themes also ran through the two principal functions held today. In the morning 1000 blue-shirted youths paid tribute to Soviet war dead at the memorial in Treptow, East Berlin.

At a meeting of the World Youth Federation later in the day, both German Communists and foreign supporters joined forces in calling the western powers "warmongers."

Most of the youths, including a few bald-headed "boys" of about 40, passed the afternoon strolling along the avenues of East Berlin.

They were prevented from crossing into West Berlin by East German police.

The only serious incident was the abduction of George Muenz, 31-year-old German teacher. He was seized by Communist police along the border of the American and Soviet sectors. Western police sought to rescue him, but were driven back by a burst of warning shots from carbines and submachine guns. Incidents of this kind have become common in Berlin and this one is not regarded as having any bearing on Sunday's rally.

Top Bulgar Officials Shifted In Major Shakeup of Cabinet

Frankfurt, Germany, May 27 (U.P.).—The official Bulgarian news agency reported today that Vice Premier and Foreign Minister Vladimar Poptomov has been relieved of the foreign affairs post in a major cabinet shakeup "suggested" by Communist Premier Vulko Chervenkov.

The report said that Mincho Neichev had been relieved as presidium chairman of the Sobranje (National Assembly) and appointed foreign minister.

Gen. Georgi Damianov, who had been defense minister, succeeded Niechev in the National Assembly post, and Gen. Petre Panchevski, Deputy Defense Minister, moved up into Damianov's place.

The agency said the changes were anounced to the Sobranje by Vice President Illya Radkov. The report did not state whether Poptomov would continue as vice premier.

Chervenkov, in addition to his duties as Premier, is secretary general of the Communist Party in Bulgaria.

Poptomov had been Foreign Minister since last August, when the late Premier Vasil Kolarov gave up the post. Neichev was elected head of the assembly presidium—a post corresponding to that of president in western countries—in January. Damianov had headed the Defense Ministry since 1946.

Chinese Reported Fleeing Wanshans

Hongkong, May 27 (AP).—A British navy spokesman reported the Chinese Nationalists abandoned the Wanshan Islands this morning, less than one day after they had announced a smashing victory over Communist invaders.

The group, also known as the Ladrones (Thieves) Islands, are about 40 miles southwest of Hongkong and 20 miles southeast of the Portuguese colony of Macao. They have blockaded the Pearl River estuary approach to Canton since the Reds seized that major south China city last November.

The British informant said Nationalist warships completed evacuation of the islands at 8 a. m. today. They took temporary shelter, he said, on Lingting Island, only 10 miles south of Hongkong.

Only Friday the Nationalist navy had issued a communique stating that it inflicted 4000 casualties and sank a Communist landing craft, 20 gunboats and 54 motor-driven junks in a rousing victory over a seaborne Red invasion force.

The communique contained, however, the suspicious line that some Communists had managed to get ashore on three small islets and were "facing annihilation."

This is the same refrain the Nationalists used on Hainan Island and elsewhere in heralding victories that later turned out to be stunning defeats.

Even dispatches from Taipei, the Nationalist capital on Formosa, said at the time that some cautious elements feared all was not well in the Wanshans. There was no word about the islands from Taipei today.

The British navy watched the Wanshan fighting closely from launches it assigned to safeguard Hongkong-Macao shipping.

The navy spokesman said the battle began Thursday when the Nationalist navy intercepted a few converted Communist warships and 200 junks heading for Lapsapmei, largest of the Wanshans. The Nationalists successfully defended that island but the Reds landed on several smaller ones.

They built up their strength and this morning (Saturday) crossed from these islands to Lapsapmei.

The Nationalists then evacuated the 1000-man garrison.

onday, found himself seconded Douglas.

The proposal is "in general a ry good idea," the Illinois Demoat said. "Certain wild and someat irresponsible charges have en made," he went on, and they ve, indeed, created a feeling of ar throughout the country which editorial noted.

Ensuing argument about the arges, Douglas said, when made her in Congress or by the Adnistration, are inclined to be disunted by the public on the suscion that they reflect partisan rposes.

"It is therefore essential," he ntended, "that there be assemd a group of men above parti suspicions, who can act acrding to thir consciences and ose judgments will be accepted the people."

The problem of rendering a fair alysis of the state of internal urity and the internal Comnist menace, he declared, is difult because "this is an election ar, and in an election year it is netimes popular to smear and sometimes pays off to play dirty. d on the other hand, the party power sometimes minimizes troubles. Thus everybody is spected of partizanship."

Men that command American nfidence — Douglas mentioned h names as James B. Conant, rnard Baruch, Robert Patter, William J. Donovan, Bishop iel, Roger Lapham, James Carey d William Green—should comse the commission's memberip, he said.

Mundt argued that other issues e Post proposed as coming under commission's consideration — w weapons, military expendires, foreign economic aid and ilian defense—constituted too a job for any one body.

If the commission were limited internal security against the mmunist menace, he said, it uld accomplish great good. But prerequisite, he insisted, is that be absolutely bipartisan, consist of a like number of Repubans and Democrats, and that ese be chosen, not by the Presint, but by the Republicans and mocrats (presumably those in ngress) themselves.

Graham asked Mundt if he reed that the current debate er charges of Communist infiltran in the Government weakened e American position abroad.

The American position abroad as weakened "without question," e South Dakotan responded, but t by the debate. The cause, ther, was "the facts that preded the debate." He was rerring to the Federal office-holds such as Alger Hiss, Julian Wadigh and Carl Marzani who had ommunist connections.

These facts, not the debate, he sserted, have created the growg feeling of uneasiness at home nd abroad. A commission to inestigate them, or "anything that an restore confidence in our State Department" is greatly needed, Mundt said.

O'Mahoney disputed the assertion of the editorial and of Mundt hat any "fear", "terror" or "hysteria" existed throughout the country. He concurred, however, in believing that a commission "above party considerations" would be desirable, if confined to the problem of Communist infiltration in the Government.

The President, however, tried to do just that, O'Mahoney recalled, in setting up the Loyalty Review Board under the chairmanship of a Republican, Seth W. Richardson.

The trouble with that, Mundt retorted, was that Richardson was chosen by the President, not by the Republicans.

Malone apparently concurred with President Truman's inference that The Post was proposing in effect a "supergovernment."

"Many of us have long agreed that we need a new government," he taunted. "It's just a question of whether we do it now or wait until November 5."

Why set up a commission, he argued, when there were already available loyal Senators who could make the same sort of inquiry.

Malone asked Graham what assurance he had from Mr. Truman that if such a commission were established, it would have access to all the files on which to base an investigation. His reference was to the Republican charge that not all the files have been disclosed to the Senate subcommittee looking into the charges of Senator McCarthy (R., Wis.).

Graham grinned and said that after Mr. Truman's press conference comment on The Post editorial last Thursday, his batting average with the White House did not seem to be very good and that, of course, there were no assurances.

The Post's position, Graham explained, was taken in the thought that if a commission were established in the executive branch, it could be allowed free access to all files, without breaching the long tradition of separation of the executive and legislative branches and their separate prerogatives.

Teen-Age Crime 'Club' Revealed in Arrests on Coast

Long Beach, Calif., May 27 (AP). Five high and grade school boys and girls arrested today—three on suspicion of murder, two on suspicion of robbery—said they are members of a club that planned crimes after studying magazine and radio crimes.

Held in the brutal holdup slaying of a liquor store owner May 12 are Thomas Charles Cook, 17 Muriel (Pickles) Downs, 17, and Peggy Byrnes, 15.

Shirley Armitage, 16, and Larry Collins, 16, both eighth graders, are accused of robbing a Compton Liquor store last night.

Det. Capt. Lorin Q. Martin quoted Miss Armitage as saying they called themselves the "Cherokee Raiders" and other fancy names. Collins said he and the others studied radio and magazine crimes, according to Martin.

"We'd pick flaws so we could avoid them and remember the smart things so we could copy them," said Peggy Byrnes.

Judge Fears Light Verdict For Ilse Koch

Augsburg, Germany, May 27 (U.P.). Judge Werner Oppel, who is expected to preside at the trial of Ilse Koch, said today he feared the notorious wartime mistress of Buchenwald may get off lightly.

Oppel, president of the Augsburg district court, was a prisoner in the Buchenwald concentration camp in 1937 after he was ousted from the bench by Hitler.

He said he was "unbiased" about the case of the 42-year-old blonde who will be tried for the attempted killing of almost 200 camp inmates.

But he said Ilse may get a light sentence because German law leaves punishment to the jury.

Ilse, who already has served a four-year term for atrocities against Allied prisoners at Buchenwald, will be tried before four German judges and 12 jurors, with Oppel probably presiding.

The Bavarian state prosecutor filed an indictment Thursday with the Augsburg court charging Ilse with 45 counts of attempted murder and 135 of attempted manslaughter. But Oppel said the indictment technically was not in force until he has certified it is in order.

"It reads more like a novel," he said. "It will have to be sent back for corrections and that may mean a delay."

Jalopies Pack British Roads In Gas Spree

London, May 27 (U.P.)—British motorists brought out old jalopies in record numbers today to celebrate the first weekend of ration-free diving in almost 11 years.

Prewar models creaked and expired along highways after yesterday's lifting of gas rationing. Roads leading to seaside resorts were strewn with old cars.

Beaming garage proprietos said they were so busy towing in brokendown vehicles they hardly had time to serve motorists lining up behind the gasoline pumps.

Thousands of drivers, crawling along two abreast at one mile an hour ,created the greatest postwar traffic jam en route to the running of the richest Derby in the history of Epsom Downs track.

But the automobile association said that otherwise traffic was not as heavy as expected for the holiday. It blamed dull, showery weather and the fact that motorists were unprepared for the unexpected end of rationing.

Many drivers were unable to get long-idle care licensed in time for the weeknd and left by train for their holiday. British railways ran 2258 extra trains and expected to cary a million holiday travels from London alone.

pretext" for reducing United States representation. It denied the propriety of a receiving state attempting "arbitrarily and unilaterally to determine the diplomatic missions of a state with which it maintains relations."

Provocations Cited

"In view," it said, "of the repeated provocations and groundless attacks against the United States and United States representatives in Czechoslovakia during the past few weeks, it is clear that the Czechoslovak government has belied its stated intention of promoting peaceful relations among nations and has made it clear that it is no longer interested in maintaining normal diplomatic relations with the United States."

The note was presented to the Czech Foreign Ministry in Prague by United States Ambassador Ellis O. Briggs. In New York, the Czech acting consul, Gen. Jan Kyjovsky declined comment on the order closing his office.

As a result of this latest exchange, the United States and Czechoslovakia will exchange an equal number of diplomatic representatives—12 each. This country will have reduced its representation from 76, then 26 and finally to 12; Czechoslovakia will have reduced its personnel in this country from 33 to 12.

It was acknowledged here that United States representation in other Iron Curtain countries, notably Poland, Hungary and Romania also are being reduced. Last February the United States severed relations with Bulgaria.

Frank Leahy, Ben Hogan, Gene Sarazen, "Happy" Chandler and Babe Didrikson will all be out at The Post's National Celebrities Golf Tournament and more celebrities will be at the Bob Hope Show. Tickets are now on sale. Don't miss these two great shows.

Adler Jury Unable To Reach a Verdict

Associated Press WIREPHOTOS

Paul Draper Mrs. McCullough Larry Adler

Hung jury dismissed in their suit against Mrs. McCullough

Hartford, Conn., May 27 (NYHT). Judge J. Joseph Smith discharged the jury in the $200,000 Larry Adler-Paul Draper libel case at 3:50 p.m. today after they had reported to him that they were hopelessly deadlocked and could not reach a verdict. The jury of eight housewives and four businessmen had deliberated fruitlessly for 11 hours and 14 minutes since they received the case yesterday.

By its action, the jury served notice that it was unable to decide whether Adler, a harmonica player, and Draper, a dancer, had been maliciously libelled by Mrs. Hester R. McCullough, Greenwich housewife. She had characterized hem in published statements as "pro-Communist in sympathy" and "open supporters of Communist-front organizations."

Sued for $100,000 Each

Protesting that they abhorred communism, the two entertainers brought suit for $100,000 each.

The eyes of Mrs. Draper, wife of the dancer, filled with tears when Paul M. Butterworth, foreman of the jury, disclosed the deadlock in United States District Court. A few moments later, Mrs. McCullough began to weep quietly into a handkerchief. Her husband, John T. McCullough, an associate picture editor of "Time" magazine, tried to comfort her.

The jury, under strict orders from Judge Smith not to talk to the press, filed out of the courtroom. There was no indication as to how many ballots had been taken or how the votes had stood.

Thew Wright, jr., counsel for the two entertainers, said that no decision had been made yet on reviving the libel suit.

Under practice here, the 20-day court case will be considered a mistrial. The Draper-Adler suit will, however, remain on the court list and the case can be reinstated if the entertainers should bring suit again within a period of a year.

Wright issued the following statement for Draper and Adler:

"We have truthfully told our whole lives to the jury. In the present climate of public opinion, the failure of this jury to be convinced of the truth of the charges which have been made against us is a vindication of our loyalty."

C. Driscoll Grimes, of counsel for Mrs. McCullough, read the following statement for his client:

"Naturally, I am greatly disappointed. I know, however, that the members of the jury gave the case their earnest and most careful consideration. I am grateful to Judge Smith for his patient and impartial conduct of the trial. I still feel that communism is the greatest threat to our American way of life."

McGrath Criticizes McCarthy

Carthy by name in a speech prepared for delivery at a Jefferson-Jackson Day dinner here. But it was clear he was talking about the Wisconsin Senator.

McCarthy has charged that the State Department is infested with Communists and Red sympathizers. The department has denied it repeatedly. A Senate committee is investigating the accusations.

McGrath asserted in a speech Wednesday that the Justice Department knows of every Communist in the United States, and added: "We know of none in the Government today."

McCarthy charged then that McGrath was prejudging at least one pending case.

Makes Hitler Analogy

In his address tonight, the text of which was distributed by the Democratic National Committee, McGrath harked back to the days of Heinrich Himmler, head of the Nazi gestapo.

McGrath said that under the police state philosophy of Hitler and Himmler:

"There was no recourse to law. There was no need to prove anything. There was nothing except the trumped-up charge, the mockery of a trial and the scaffold, the firing squad or the ax."

Then the Attorney General declared:

"There are those (in this country) who are being goaded by an hysterical fear of war, who are being frightened by the implications of the possession of an atomic weapon by our enemies, people who are willing to allow witch-hunts and frantic name-calling to endanger our national liberties.

"I say that this does violence to the principles for which our country stands. It does violence to the Bill of Rights, which is the very foundation stone of our human liberties under the Constitution.

"We cannot substitute the police State method for existing laws and procedures, as do some who have criticized the present loyalty investigation program and grossly misrepresented it."

Defends Loyalty Check

McCarthy has blasted the loyalty program time and again. And he has charged that members of the State Department's loyalty board are incompetent.

"We are aggressively working to prevent disloyal persons from infiltrating our Government," McGrath decared.

He added that President Truman and the leaders of his Administration are "unalterably opposed to the Godless, slave philosophy of communism" and are fighting it at home and abroad.

"But at the same time," McGrath said, "we are trying to protect the rights of individuals in this loyalty check program.

"The President does not want a gestapo in the United States, nor you and I. And I can assure you that J. Edgar Hoover has no desire to have any police state secret police duties imposed upon the FBI, and such duties will not be imposed on that organization at the direction of President Truman or at my direction."

[In Washington, meantime, McCarthy accused the Senate investigating subcommittee of suppressing material that might "expose Communists in the Government."

[He called attention to the fact that subcommittee chairman Millard Tydings (D., Md.) released only part of the testimony of former Government prosecutor Robert M. Hitchcock, who was questioned Friday on his role in the 1945 Amerasia magazine case.

[Tydings had indicated that what he made public was a prepared, initial, statement of Hitchcock to the subcommittee. The transcript of the questioning of Hitchcock, in closed session, has not been released.]

Senators Not to Look Into Oak Ridge Crime

Oak Ridge, Tenn., May 27 (U.P.).—Senator Estes Kefauver (D., Tenn.) has advised four attorneys that his Senate Crime Investigating Committee won't come to Tennessee to investigate their charges of syndicated crime at Oak Ridge.

"We can't take over the problems of the various communities," was Kefauver's reply to the request. "That has to be left to local law enforcement agencies."

The four Tennessee attorneys said "a nationally controlled crime syndicate" has infiltrated the guard force at the atomic energy plant here.

They asked Kefauver for permission to testify before his group, saying "the very foundation of the security program at Oak Ridge is being undermined by the forces of organized crime."

Their letter to Kefauver said that "in the last two years numerous individuals, associated with lawless elements in other areas, have moved to Anderson County." (Part of Oak Ridge is in Anderson County.)

"Representatives of this group include both men and women from such areas as Cleveland, O., Sandusky, O., Chicago, and Indianapolis," they said.

The letter was signed by W. B. Lewallen, Howard Vincent, J. R. Harrington and James Weaver, all of Anderson County.

They said that on May 17 a group of citizens in Anderson County obtained warrants for police to raid a local warehouse. Twelve hours later, police entered the building and seized $20,000 worth of 'illegal gambling devices," they said.

On this raid, they said, "much valuable information was obtained" indicating alleged infiltration of the county and city by former convicts, gangsters and members of the organized syndicate."

"Names and phone numbers of leading and responsible personnel in the police agencies of this county, including personnel at the atomic energy plants at Oak Ridge, were found in this raid by the citizens" the letter added.

Two men were indicted by an Anderson County grand jury this week for possession of the machines.

Fay Asked to Probe Erickson

Wyo.), a committee member, were reported to be going over books of the Colonial Inn at Hallandale, Fla., near Miami.

The Erickson records turned up in New York showed that he and 10 others netted $685,538 between November 1, 1945, and October 31, 1946, from that establishment. Erickson's share, on a 5 percent interest, was $34,276.

Checking "Charities"

Most interesting angle of the Colonial Inn figures was the large amount, over $40,000, listed as payments for "charities." The Senators are known to be interested in determining if this represented any sort of political payoff or protection money.

McFarland yesterday made it clear his group doesn't intend to recall either Erickson or Costello to the stand. Gambler Joe Adonis escaped being another witness by pleading illness though a subpena was out for him.

It was McFarland's committee which on Friday made public a draft on an antigambling bill. This bill would prevent transmission of horse race betting information prior to the beginning of a race. It has been approved by the full committee as well.

Asked yesterday about reports that Chairman McCarran (D., Nev.) of the Senate Judiciary Committee had suggested the bill should be looked over by his group as well, McFarland said that "such a move would defeat the possibility of legislation this year."

The bill will be put on the regular Senate calendar as soon as it is filed by the committee.

Crime Probe Pressure Charged by Sen. Wiley

Senator Wiley of Wisconsin, one of the two Republican members of the Senate crime committee, last night charged that "certain outside influences" which "are connected with the Democratic political organization" are "apparently already attempting to use pressure to pervert the committee's work."

He said, in speaking over the Chicago Tribune's radio station, WGN, that these unnamed persons "have already tried certain high-up channels of approach" and undoubtedly would try others.

Wiley called for a non-partisan rather than bipartisan inquiry by the crime committee.

Bill Fails of Purpose, Horsemen's Head Says

New York, May 26 (U.P.). — The Thoroughbred Racing Associations of the United Sttaes charged today that the bill outlawing advance transmission of certain racing information "does not accomplish its original objective" of dealing a knockout blow to bookmakers.

Spencer J. Drayton, executive secretary, said that, instead of putting the bookmaker and the illegal wire service out of business, the bill "penalizes by its censorship provisions 24,000,000 racing fans."

Seating space is limited at the National Guard Armory so you'd better get your tickets early for the Bob Hope Show this Saturday night.

Kefauver Criticizes Florida Enforcement

newsmen. "I hope we can get some laws passed in Congress to stop some of this."

The Tennessee Senator flew into Miami unannounced yesterday, accompanied by Senator Lester Hunt (D., Wyo.) and Rudolph Halley, chief investigator for the five-man Senate crime investigating committee.

Summonses were issued immediately and the group opened its probe with two hours after arrival. The move caught local officials by surprise.

Kefauver declined to say where the Senate group will move next in its Nation-wide probe. He planned to leave Miami tonight for Washington.

Downey Rice, one of the committee's special investigators, was left behind to continue work in the Miami area for a few days and Kefauver said the committee will return here later.

The two-day hearing was held in a locked and closely guarded room of the Federal Building. FBI agents ushered in 16 witnesses. The investigators also subpenaed voluminous records, including the books of several big Florida Gold Coast gambling clubs.

One of the main witnesses was J. J. Brown, chief of the intelligence unit of the Bureau of Internal Revenue in Miami.

Kefauver said the records "covered all kinds of gambling operations in Dade and Broward Counties."

He said the information "will enable us to see the whole picture better and to tie it in to what is happening elsewhere in the United States."

Broward County Sheriff Walter Clark was one of the final witnesses to appear before the investigators. The county, just north of Miami, holds several gambling places. One of these, the Greenacres Club, is listed under the ownership of Joe Adonis, close associate of New York gamblers Erickson and Frank Costello.

Trinity Methodist Builds School Annex

Members of Trinity Methodist Church, 2911 Cameron Mills rd., Alexandria, will break ground at 11:50 this morning for a $90,000 Sunday school annex.

The 176-year-old church was rebuilt in 1942, but the area's population growth proved too much for existing Sunday School facilities. Rev. H. S. Southgate, pastor, will officiate.

Bolling GI Sought In Slaying of Cabbie

19, of South Boston, Mass.

Brown was found badly beaten and almost unconscious 10 minutes later, one mile from the Main Gate, by Sergt. Neil E. Wegner, who noticed the cab standing well off the road with lights burning, and investigated.

Several hundred soldiers were interviewed during the day and night as investigators moved from barracks to barracks, sending personnel to OSI headquarters where Gillette and Homicide Lieut. Jack Baker questioned them.

Might Call Navy Divers

It was expected that Navy divers might be called to search that portion of the Potomac River bottom parallel to the road near which Brown's body was found.

Police had all but discarded robbery as motive, after finding untouched approximately $6 in Brown's change carrier and $4 in his wallet, which was recovered intact with his personal papers near the scene.

District Coroner Dr. A. Magruder MacDonald and Deputy Coroner Christopher J. Murphy performed an autopsy yesterday afternoon. Murphy said a bullet entered the middle of the back of Brown's head, lodged in his brain and caused his death.

The caliber of the bullet was not disclosed by authorities. It was turned over to police. Ballistics tests will be made by either the FBI or the National Bureau of Standards, probably Monday, Homicide Squad Capt. Jeremiah Flaherty said.

3 Severe Head Wounds

In addition to the bullet wound, Murphy said there were three severe head wounds, apparently inflicted by a blunt instrument which could have been a gun butt.

Four fingernail scratches and bruises around Brown's neck indicated a struggle had taken place. Police theorized the shooting may have occurred as a result of an argument about cab fare.

Brown was employed as a Postoffice Department typewriter repair mechanic and drove a taxi one or two nights a week to help finance the new home he had just built himself. He is married and the father of a 4-year-old son, Robert.

The death is the second involving Bolling Air Force Base personnel within four days. Sergt. Vernon Staley, 32, died Thursday night after a fight with a civilian in an Accokeek, Md., garage.

Wegner told authorities he was returning from a date to his 42d Statistical Services Unit barracks when he noticed the cab. After he had called military police he returned to the cab and then heard the moans of Brown.

The victim was lying on the grass near a square cement culvert less than 5 feet from the road. Brown gave his name, Wegner said, and then groaned, "What will my honey think of me now?"

Wegner said that Brown then said "something that sounded like 'Marie' or 'Marine,'" according to police.

Wegner said the ignition key was on in Brown's cab, but the motor was not running. A Bolling ambulance took Brown to the Base Hospital immediately. He died there at 4:40 a. m.

The Base was closed down at 5 a. m. and restrictions were not lifted until about 11:30 a. m.

Base regulations require that all privately owned weapons be stored with Base Supply Officers and cannot be removed without official permission. All military weapons are listed with the Provost Marshal. Only military personnel authorized to carry weapons off the Base are OSI agents, military police, mail couriers and intelligence officers.

Gordon C. Brown, sr., the victim's father, told police his son normally carried about $6 in change and $3 or $4 in his wallet.

Brown, jr., was born in Washington and had lived in Carmody Hills for about 18 years. He was graduated from Maryland Park High School and married in 1945. His wife's name is Audrey.

Before joining the Postoffice Department, Brown was employed by a local typewriter firm.

Homicide detectives inquired whether Brown carried a gun in his cab. Relatives declared that he owned one—a Luger—but had turned it over to his father.

Syrians Declared For Sovietization Over 'Judaization'

Damascus, Syria, May 27 (U.P.).—Akram El-Haurani, Syria's "strong man," today said the "Syrians would prefer Sovietization to Judaization."

El-Haurani is leader of the Liberal Republican bloc, second in strength to the People's Party in the constituent assembly. He was until recently defense minister.

"Syrians are not Communists, nor are they prepared to become Communists," he said in an interview.

"But when they are faced with a choice between Judaization, with its consequent national annihilation and mass homelessness, and Sovietization, with transformation of their country into a Soviet republic, they will certainly choose the latter alternative."

Suit for $1.3 Million Is Filed by Rep. Scott

Philadelphia May 27 (U.P.).—A $1,350,000 suit, claiming damage to property, was filed against a North Haven (Conn.) road builder today by Representative Hardie Scott and his family.

The Federal court suit charged that L. G. De Felice & Son, Inc., "trespassed" and damaged the Scotts' holdings in Tredyffrin Township, Chester County. The firm has been extending the Pennsylvania turnpike contract.

The Republican Congressman from Philadelphia and his family contend the De Felice firm did not have their "consent or authority" to enter upon their 670 acres of land.

Bill Signed Hitting Lewd Recordings

Can't Happen Here, Says CTC Of Death Jam

A Capital Transit Co. official says it can't happen here.

Although local streetcars are of the same general construction as those in Chicago where 33 died in a collision Thursday, the rear doors can't be jammed by the pressure of riders, E. C. Giddings, vice president, said.

"Picture an accordion," he said. "Our doors break outward; those in Chicago, inward."

Giddings said any weight on the treadle will open the rear door when the car is standing still. And, he added, any physical pressure against the rear doors which will open them an inch and one-half will open them automatically. If the car is moving, and the doors are open, the car will stop automatically, he said.

Pope to Elevate French Queen to Sainthood Today

Vatican City, May 27 (U.P.).—Pope Pius XII will elevate to sainthood a Fifteenth century queen of France, Jeanne of Valois, in the fourth canonization ceremony of the holy year Saturday in St. Peter's basilica.

An estimated 50,000 holy year pilgrims will take part in the ceremony.

Queen Jeanne of Valois, the "Cinderella" of the French royal house in the second half of the Fifteenth Century, was the outcast wife of Louis XII. She was hated in court circles because she was considered physically repulsive.

After Louis XII obtained an annulment of their marriage, she devoted her life to prayer and charity. She retired to the city of Bruges, where she founded the Religious Order of the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin.

Liaquat Ali Enters Clinic for Checkup

Boston, May 27 (U.P.). — Prime Minister Liaquat Ali Kahn of Pakistan, completing a tour of the United States with his wife, entered Lahey Clinic today for a three-day physical checkup.

The couple yesterday visited Concord, Lexington and Massachusetts Institute of Technology. They leave Tuesday for Ottawa, Ontario, for a 4½-day visit to Canada. They are due to depart Saturday from New York for London and Karachi, India.

Belgium's Fourth Election Fails To Stir Voters

Brussels, Belgium, May 27 (AP). Belgium's fourth postwar election campaign with King Leopold as the issue is in full swing but it has failed to stir up the voters.

On Sunday, June 4, Belgians will elect a new Parliament, but the poverty of party treasuries and lack of popular enthusiasm has kept interest to a minimum.

The Social Christians seek control of the Senate and House of Representatives so they can bring back King Leopold.

Socialists and Liberals are trying to win by balancing the royal issue with programs of social and tax reforms.

Three Days of Memorial Services Listed

Greater Washington's observance of Memorial Day will begin today and come to a climax Tuesday at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier in Arlington National Cemetery.

Scores of memorial services are scheduled in the city, from which thousands have left by air, rail, bus and automobile for a holiday weekend, and other thousands are visiting.

Gen. George C. Marshall, president of the American Red Cross, will deliver the principal address at the Tuesday program starting at 1 p. m. at Arlington Cemetery.

The laying of the many wreaths in honor of the Nation's war dead at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier will begin at 11 a. m., when Capt. Adam J. Eisenhauer, USA, will lay the first wreath in behalf of President Truman.

Captain Eisenhauer also will lay wreaths at the Confederate Monument and the monument to the unknown soldiers of the Civil War.

The annual Memorial Mass for the War Dead sponsored by the Washington General Assembly, Fourth Degree, Knights of Columbus, and more than a hundred national and local Catholic organizations will be held at 10 a. m. today in the Arlington Cemetery Amphitheater.

To Deliver Sermon

Brig. Gen. James H. O'Neill Deputy Chief of Chaplains, will deliver the sermon. The celebrant of the Mass will be the Right Rev. Peter L. Ireton, D.D., Bishop of Richmond; the assistant priest, the Right Rev. Msgr. John K. Cartwright; deacon, Chaplain (Comdr.) Walter A. Mahler, USN; subdeacon, Chaplain (Lieut. Col.) James B. Murphy, USA; master of ceremonies, the Rev. Justin McClunn, vice chancellor of the Richmond diocese. The choir of the Carmelite Fathers will sing the mass.

Many members of Congress, high Government officials and members of the Diplomatic Corps are to be present.

The reorganized Rockville (Md.) Legion Post, No. 86, will meet at 11 a. m. today at the Rockville Baptist Church for memorial services led by the Rev. William B. Adams. Following the service, Legionnaires will place flags on the graves of servicemen in the Rockville area.

Nurses of the Armed Forces will participate in a 1 p. m. memorial service today at the grave of Jane A. Delano, famed World War I nurse, in Arlington Cemetery.

'Poppy Processional'

Watson B. Miller, Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization, will be the chief speaker at the services, sponsored by Jane A. Delano Post of the American Legion. Music by the United States Army Band and a "Poppy Processional" in which both Army and Navy nurses will participate, will be features of the service.

The District department of the United Spanish War Veterans will hold a memorial service at 3 p. m. today at the Watergate.

At 11:30 a. m. today, Washington Post No. 58, Jewish War Veterans, will pay tribute to departed comrades in a service at the Montgomery County (Md.) Jewish Community, 2901 East-West hwy.

Pepco Post, American Legion, will hold a Catholic service for its war dead at 1 p. m. today in the Army Medical Center's Memorial Chapel. Capt. James M. Hearn, assistant post chaplain, will deliver the sermon.

In Berwyn, Md., the Phillips-Kleiner VFW Post will conduct a service at 2 p. m. today at the memorial plaque at Baltimore blvd. and Greenbelt rd.

The Cheverly (Md.) American Legion Post 108 and its auxiliary will sponsor a service at 11 a. m. today at Cheverly Community Church.

Monday, 50 members of the Metropolitan Police Boys Club and 50 students at Holy Comforter Parochial School, 15th and East Capitol sts. will place carnations, poppies and roses on graves in Arlington Cemetery in preparation for Memorial Day. They will be under the direction of Adjutant-Quartermaster John F. Farrell, of General Nelson A. Miles Camp No. 1, United Spanish War Veterans.

Theodore Roosevelt High School, 13th and Upshur sts. nw., will pay tribute to its 72 war dead at 2 p. m. Monday when a memorial flagpole and plaque will be dedicated in outdoor exercises, to which the superintendent of schools and members of the Board of Education have been invited.

Chief Judge Bolitha James Laws of the United States District Court for the District, will be the chief speaker. Miss May P. Bradshaw, former principal of Roosevelt, will also speak. The plaque, a gift of the Roosevelt Alumni Association, will be unveiled by its president, Joseph Basso. The plaque is attached to the base of the flagpole, designed by Municipal Architect J. L. Coe.

Tuesday's program at the amphitheater in Arlington Cemetery is under the auspices of the GAR Memorial Day Corporation, whose president, Lee R. Pennington, will preside. The assemblage will be called to order by Hampton D. Percy, chairman of the general arrangements committee, at 1 p. m.

Gen. Marshall will be followed as a speaker by Carl Saunders, Jackson, Mich., newspaper editor, whose editorial, "A Prayer for Peace," won a 1950 Pulitzer Prize.

Page's "The American's Creed," "General Logan's Order Establishing Memorial Day," and the "Pledge of Allegiance" will be given, respectively, by three District department commanders—Charles K. Dunn, American Legion; Robert F. Sutphin, Veterans of Foreign Wars, and John M. Murphy, Amvets.

The United States Marine Band and the United States Army Band Chorus will participate in the program.

The Woman's Relief Corps, GAR, will conduct services at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier at 10 a. m., Tuesday. At the same hour services will also be held at Grave 19156 for Allied officers and enlisted men of foreign armies.

The United Spanish War Veterans will hold services at 10 a. m. at the Spanish War Monument, and at 10:30 a. m. at the USS Maine Mast.

An anchor-shaped wreath of buddy poppies will be cast into the Potomac at Hains Point during ceremonies of the Veterans of Foreign Wars in memory of the Navy dead of all wars. The program will be held at 9 a. m. Tuesday. Theodore H. Rinehart, captain of VFW Admiral Robert E. Peary Ship No. 427, will speak.

Dr. Elmer Louis Kayser, dean of students at George Washington University, will be principal speaker at a 3:30 p. m. Memorial Day service of the Brightwood Citizens Association at the Battle Ground National Cemetery.

Services will be conducted by Washington Branch No. 4 of the Fleet Reserve Association at 11:15 a. m. Tuesday at the Watergate, assisted by Boy Scouts.

Maj. Gen. Ernest M. Brannon, Army judge advocate general, will be the main speaker at exercises at the law library of the Georgetown University School of Law at 10 a. m. Tuesday.

In Arlington the annual Memorial Day service usually conducted at the monument on the courthouse lawn—because of the addition to the courthouse—will be conducted at 2 p. m. at the American Legion Home, 3445 North Washington blvd. Chief speaker will be Col. Early E. W. Duncan, USAF, chief of personnel service, division of the Air Forces, Military Personnel.

George E. Way, commander of John Lyon Post No. 3150, VFW, is chairman of arrangements. Serving on the committee with him are members of the veterans committee appointed by the County Board, and commanders of the American Legion, Catholic War Veterans, Jewish War Veterans and VFW posts in the county.

Preceding the 2 p. m. service will be a parade starting at 1:30 p. m. at North Garfield st. and Wilson blvd., and proceeding west on Wilson blvd. to the Clarendon Circle, then out Washington blvd. to the American Legion Home.

In Prince Georges County, Md., the war dead will be honored at Peace Cross in Bladensburg and at memorials in various communities.

The Peace Cross ceremony at 2 p. m. Tuesday will be sponsored by the Snyder-Farmer-Butler American Legion Post, the Hyattsville Memorial VFW Post and the Council of Prince Georges County Legion Posts.

A wreath-laying ceremony at the Capitol Heights memorial will be held Tuesday at 11 a. m. A parade at 1:15 p. m. will precede a service at the Seat Pleasant memorial Tuesday at 2:30 p. m. The Strawn-Turner-Hartman VFW Post, My Maryland American Legion Post and auxiliaries will be the sponsors.

Thousands Leave, More Arrive In Long Holiday Travel Rush

By Sam Zagoria
Post Reporter

Where there's a will, there's a way—to get around a working day Monday and stretch the Memorial Day holiday into a four-day weekend—and thousands here did it,

Thousands took to the beaches, mountain spots and old home towns. Many Government workers took annual leave for Monday, and others did some finagling.

The weatherman spurred many on to cooler zones with a prediction of mostly sunny with highest temperature about 80 today and little indication of cooling off on Monday and Tuesday. That was all the stimulus many needed to pack into the old jalopy, especially after the thermometer hit 82 yesterday.

Meanwhile, rail, bus and plane arrivals brought new contingents of tourists, family friends and relatives here.

As the Greyhound Bus Terminal dispatcher philosophized:

"Everybody here goes someplace else and everybody from someplace else comes here."

The Greyhound man said loads Friday and yesterday were about the same as last Memorial Day with about an even break of incoming and outgoing.

At Trailways terminal the dispatcher found the rush coming and going—was a "little better" than last year. This was surprising since last year Memorial Day made a convenient three-day holiday.

The railroad lines ran some extra sections and a Union Station official reported about 110,000 through the terminal on Friday—60 percent outward-bound and 40 percent Washington-bound. Yesterday this dropped to between 80,000 and 90,000 with the percentages reversed. In all, traffic was about 10 percent less than last Memorial Day, he reported.

Airlines are having a big weekend, too. The United Air Lines announced extra sections were scheduled across the country, including Washington, with many airborne taking a four-day vacation.

American Airlines had reservations beyond last year's weekend, but actual passengers carried was about the same because of some cancelled flights caused by bad weather. Yesterday traffic picked up and looked like one of the best Saturdays of the year, the line reported.

On Tuesday, Memorial Day, banks, schools, Government offices and almost all stores will close.

Holiday Death Toll Hits 90

Chilly weather kept Memorial Day outings—and drownings—at a minimum yesterday, but highway fatalities mounted steadily in all sections of the country.

Early Saturday the violent death toll since 6 p. m. (local time) Friday had risen to 90. This included 70 traffic deaths, 10 drownings and 10 deaths from miscellaneous accidents.

The National Safety Council forecast that 290 persons would be killed in highway accidents by Tuesday midnight. Heavy road traffic was expected.

Violent deaths by States, listing traffic, drownings and miscellaneous fatalities in that order:

Lung Cancer Linked With Heavy Smoking

By N. S. Haseltine
Post Reporter

A significant relationship between prolonged tobacco smoking and the development of lung cancers is shown in two reports in the current Journal of the American Medical Association.

Excessive and prolonged use of tobacco, particularly cigarettes, seems to be an important factor in causing cancers that originate in the lungs, concluded Dr. Evarts A. Graham, professor of surgery at Washington University, St. Louis.

Dr. Graham reported he found that among 605 men with lung cancer, 96.5 percent were moderately heavy to chain smokers for many years. By comparison, he reported, the same smoking rate was 73.7 percent among 780 men without cancer in a general hospital population.

Further statistical evidence, he reported, revealed that in the cancer group, 51.2 percent were excessive or chain smokers as compared to 19.1 percent in the general hospital group.

"In general," concluded Dr. Graham, "it appears the less a person smokes the less is his chance of developing cancer of the lung, and the more heavily a person smokes the greater his chance of becoming affected with this disease."

For the survey, light smokers are classed as those who smoke 9 or less cigarettes a day; moderately heavy smokers, 10 to 15; heavy smokers, 16 to 20; excessive smokers, 21 to 34, and chain smokers, 35 or more.

Dr. Graham, who conducted his survey at Barnes Hospital, St. Louis, reported also that the occurrence of carcinoma of the lung in male nonsmokers is a rare phenomenon, two percent, according to his study.

Women Have Smoked Less

Women smokers so far seem to have escaped the rising incidence of lung cancers noted among men. However, few women have smoked for 20 years or more, as have 96.1 percent of the male cancer patients.

"This is believed to be one of the reasons for the greater incidence of the disease (cancer of the lung) among men today," concluded Dr. Graham.

He further pointed out that the lung cancer patient may have given up smoking entirely years before his cancer showed up. The leg between cessation of smoking and appearance of clinical symptons may be 10 years or more, he noted.

Among male patients with lung cancers, 94.1 percent were recorded as cigarette smokers; 4 percent were pipe smokers, and 3.5 percent were cigar smokers, it was noted.

Twice As Frequently

Reporting other results in the same Journal, two New York medical investigators noted that data obtained from 1650 patients routinely admitted to Roswell Park Memorial Institute, Buffalo, indicated that in a hospital population lung cancers occur more than twice as frequently among those who smoked cigarettes for 25 years than among other smokers or nonsmokers of comparable age.

The New York survey was conducted by Drs. Morton L. Levin, Hyman Goldstein and Paul R. Gerhardt, Bureau of Cancer Control, New York State Department of Health, Albany, N. Y.

Sawyer Tells Two to Resign

resignation after being directed to fire me by a Senate subcommittee. I am shocked by this treatment since I have served the department loyally and to the best of my ability for five years.

"The Department Loyalty Board has already cleared me after a lengthy investigation last August. The Secretary himself has publicly stated that he has no doubt as to my loyalty. My record is clear and I have nothing to hide.

"I am not now and I have never been a Communist or a Communist sympathizer. I have never even been duped into joining a front organization. It would be cowardly for me to resign under fire. I refuse to set a precedent by which in the future no Government employe will be safe from this kind of persecution."

Lee, born in Manchuria of Russian parents, is chief of the Commerce Department's Far Eastern branch in the Office of International Trade. Remington is an international trade economist in the OIT.

Sawyer's action followed a session of the Senate Commerce Committee on Thursday in which it was reported he was told that unless he fired Lee, the committee would make public a lengthy report about him, and undertake a full-fledged investigation of the department.

In a television program last night, Senator Malone (D., Nev.), who has been Lee's principal accuser, declared that Sawyer fired the official because he was afraid if he did not, his whole department would be investigated.

Sawyer does not have summary powers to dismiss employes on grounds of disloyalty. Action on such charges is subject to appeal by the employe to the President's Loyalty Review Board. Accordingly, it would appear that if Remington and Lee refuse to resign, Sawyer must obtain their discharge for other reasons.

If proceedings are begun against Lee to discharge him on grounds of unsuitability, he can appeal fist to a Department grievance committee, and thence to Secretary Sawyer. There is no administrative recourse for him beyond that point.

Remington, a veteran with Civil Service status, can fight his appeal to the Civil Service Commission.

Malone has charged that Lee is the man "whom the Chinese blame more than any other individual for deliberately delaying vital shipments of aviation gasoline and other supplies to Nationalist China until the Red hordes took over."

When Malone made this charge last February, high Commerce Department officials rallied to Lee's defense. They said insofar as his holding up aviation gasoline shipments, the contrary was true.

At a press conference last month, Sawyer backed Lee and said he believed he was "a loyal citizen and department employe."

Remington was accused originally by Elizabeth Bentley, confessed former Communist courier, of transmitting secret information to her, He later was cleared by a loyalty review board and reinstated in the Commerce Department in a less "sensitive" job. A second check was ordered recently after the House Un-American Activities Committee produced testimony that he used to be a Communist. Remington swore he never was.

A grand jury began consideration of Remington in New York last week. Its findings have not yet been reported.

Fireman Hurt Fighting Blaze

Dr. Watson to Describe Imaginary Trip

Dr. Paul Watson, curator of Astronomy at the Maryland Academy of Science, will describe an imaginary trip through space at the regular meeting of the National Capital Astronomers on Saturday.

The meeting, in cooperation with the National Capital Parks, will be at 8:15 p. m. at the Sylvan Theater.

National Grotto Convention Gets Under Way Here June 7

Between 12,000 and 15,000 Grotto members from the 48 States and two provinces of Canada are expected for a four-day convention here, beginning Wednesday, June 7.

The conclave, known as the Mystic Order of Veiled Prophets of the Enchanted Realm, is regarded as Washington's biggest National convention in 15 years.

The program will include a giant parade Thursday, June 8, and a prize competition for drill and drum corps and musical groups Friday, June 9.

Headed by Grand Monarch Frank B. Jones of Youngstown, Ohio, the Grottos will visit Mount Vernon, the George Washington National Masonic Memorial at Alexandria, and the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier in Arlington Cemetery on the opening day.

The Grand Monarch's banquet at the Hotel Statler will be held that evening.

Hundreds of Grotto chapters, colorful marching units and bands and floats will participate in the Thursday parade, scheduled to begin at 8:30 a.m., and to continue for several hours. The line of march has not been set.

Election of officers of the Supreme Council of the Mystic Order will be held June 9. The drill and musical competition is scheduled for 1:30 that afternoon on the Ellipse.

The Supreme Council also will have a special session that day in the auditorium of the George Washington National Masonic Memorial in Alexandria, while the final session of the Supreme Council and installation of officers will be on June 10. It will be the sixtieth annual session of the Supreme Council.

Cochairmen for the four-day event are William E. Doolan, Grand Monarch of the host Kallipolis Grotto here, and David Tuckman, also of Kallipolis Grotto.

"FAITH IS POWER—FOR YOU"
by Dr. Daniel A. Poling
A condensation of the popular book in six installments
Monday through Saturday, May 29–June 3

Dr. Poling's inspiring new book is of particular interest in view of his position as a religious leader. He is editor of the Christian Herald and president of the World's Christian Endeavor Union as well as a member of the President's Commission on Religion and Welfare in the Armed Forces. His son, Clark, was one of the four famous chaplains who, during World War II, gave their lifebelts to others and went down with the U. S. S. Dorchester.

Read these stirring experiences that illustrate how faith can sustain people through life. They reveal not only what faith has meant to a famous clergyman and his family, but what it can mean to you.

When One Mistake Is One Too Many

Just one mistake by the executor of an estate can nullify the terms of a carefully drawn will. Be sure your executor has long experience, is of unquestioned financial responsibility and devotes full attention to the task. For more than 60 years The Washington Loan And Trust Company has more than met those qualifications, and successfully administered both large and small trusts. Important for you to consider also is that we could never be absent, ill, or too busy to discuss any matter pertaining to an estate left in our trust.

Why not pay us a visit with your attorney, or if you prefer, a trust officer will call at your convenience.

Group Asks Nonsegregated Sports Program in Schools

The Federation of Civic Associations has asked the District Board of Education to set up an athletic program which would include competition between white and Negro schools.

In a resolution passed at its Friday night meeting, the federation asked the board to begin city-wide scheduling in the fall.

The resolution, submitted by Dr. Ellis O. Knox, chairman of the education committee, also asked that comprehensive curricula be provided in the three Negro high schools and in the new Spingarn High School.

In other business the federation took in its twenty-ninth member, the Northwest Civic Association. Hubert B. Pair, assistant District Corporation Counsel, is president of the new member body.

Cominform Due to Meet

Rome, May 27 (AP).—The independent newspaper Il Momento today said a meeting of the Cominform would be held next week in Poland. It said Communist Senator Eugenio Reale, one-time Italian ambassador to Warsaw, and probably Palmiro Togliatti, Italian Communist chieftain, would attend.

Fogerty Opens All-Out Fight Against Riders Cutting Agency Jobs

Representative Fogarty (D., R. I.), a key member of the House Appropriations Committee, has launched an all-out fight on the Taber-Thomas and Jensen job-cutting riders.

He's chairman of the subcommittee in charge of appropriations for the Labor Department and the Federal Security Agency. In a House speech, he explained in detail how the House-approved riders would affect those agencies. Referring to the Public Health Service he said in part:

"The effect of these amendments on medical research scientists themselves cannot be overestimated. We all know that it has been extremely difficult to recruit and hold the best scientific brains in Government. Substantial progress has been made in removing the reservations of medical research personnel as to the possibility of doing effective work in Government laboratories.

"The stimulating achievements and congressional recognition of Federal medical research since the war have attracted able men. They have found they can have the cherished freedom of inquiry essential to productive research. They have been given the space, equipment, and help required for modern medical research. Salaries have been made more adequate for top-flight medical research scientists.

"The missing critical element is assurance of stability. Research in cancer, heart disease, and mental disease is a long-term proposition. The work eventually resulting in the startling findings that we read about is deliberate, painstaking. To interrupt research of this sort is virtually to destroy it.

"Research scientists know this, and they will not tolerate a situation in which the conditions essential to their work is absent. The Taber-Thomas amendment will not only disrupt work in progress, but will forestall the recruitment of the scientists whose efforts are the heart of medical research.

"We have spent millions out at Bethesda, Md., and millions more are in the bill to build a clinical research hospital to strengthen our efforts toward solving some of the mysteries of cancer, heart diseases, and many other ailments which beset human beings.

"It is expected to be open in July, 1952, and the people to staff that great institution will fall into all categories. Some will be medical personnel, it is true, but all scientists and researchers are not medical personnel. These amendments take a swipe at the fine staff they have, and had hoped to retain, to go into that great research center.

"Obviously," Fogarty told the House, "it is foolhardy to initiate medical research in one year, then cut it back in the next year. If the enormous potentialities of these studies are to be realized, the support must be stable from year to year."

The Rhode Island legislator explained that the 20 percent cut in travel money would hamper Public Health's programs to apply sodium fluoride to the teeth of school children and to take mass X-rays to detect tuberculosis. The PHS teams on the projects travel from one place to another constantly.

Fogarty said the House committee had recommended funds for the Bureau of Old Age & Survivors Insurance to hire 650 additional employes. The riders, he said, would wipe out about 550 of the agency's jobs. He added the bureau would have to operate under the riders with about 1200 people less than it needs to do its work. The bureau is operated by a trust fund financed by contributions from both workers and employes.

It was his opinion, Fogarty said, that the Taber-Thomas rider would apply to both the legislative and judicial branches. He asked his colleagues how they would like to make a 10 percent cut in the clerical staffs of their offices.

And he asked them other questions, too, such as: "Are you going to be satisfied to let the departments and agencies make your cuts for you? What will you say when they apply the cut and make it against some activity, project or office in which you are especially interested and that directly affects your people?"

Fogarty said it was clear to him that the cutting would have to be made by the Budget Bureau and the agencies and not the Congress under the Taber-Thomas rider.

The legislator asked the Senate to kill the amendments. He added: "I do not think they (the riders) will stick when the full impact is known. They cannot stick because they are senseless, indiscriminate, arbitrary, unintelligent, and basically contrary to the process by which the Congress appropriates specific amounts for specific functions and services."

Fogarty may be correct but there is a determined move in the Senate Appropriations Committee to make some sort of over-all cut in the President's budget.

Housebreaking Suspect Held in $10,000 Bond

William Johnson, 19, of 62 Defrees st. nw., was held under $10,000 bond yesterday for the action of the grand jury on charges of housebreaking.

Municipal Court Judge Thomas D. Quinn said Johnson already was under bond pending grand jury action on other housebreaking charges.

Police reported a total of 14 counts of housebreaking against Johnson will be presented to the grand jury.

Commission Vote Holds Fair's Fate Thursday

Survival Doubtful If 6 Congressional Members Agree On Abandonment

By Thomas Winship
Post Reporter

Freedom Fair "probably is a dead pigeon" if the 15-member Sesquicentennial Commission votes Thursday to wash its hands of it, Jack Handy, a New York, management consultant, said last night.

With four of the five-member Sesqui Executive Committee already on record for abandoning the 1951-52 exposition, a reversal of that vote rests with the six congressional members of the full commission.

Yesterday a Capitol observer, said he would be "terribly surprised" if the Congressmen would vote to oppose the executive committee.

Skipped Meetings

It was pointed out that the Senate or House members of the commission seldom attended meetings and therefore would hestitate to "buck the abandonment trend at this late date."

Two days ago Handy said he believed the Fair could be staged successfully by a new and independent corporation, completely divorced from Sesqui and Federal Government auspices.

For the Government to back out Handy said last night, "would take a tremendous amount out of the enthusiasm for the Fair. I would say Freedom Fair probably is a dead pigeon if the commission votes against it this week."

On the talked-up proposition of an independent corporation to handle the fair should the Sesqui Commission fade out, Handy now states prospective industry and labor exhibitors would ask themselves: "Who's behind it now, a bunch of amateurs?"

Writes Open Letter

Handy last night wrote an open letter to newspapers reiterating his opinion the Sesqui Commission can run the exposition without its own non-profit corporation which the Attorney General has ruled against.

He said: "What we need is a Voice of America beamed to our own people on every frequency, and Freedom Fair, for a year in preparation and through two years of exhibition, will provide one such voice.

'One banker told me the opposition feels a 50-million dollar fair is just too big for the comparatively small city of Washington.

"Washington may seem a small city to its permanent inhabitants, but to the rest of the country it is the Capital of the Nation, if not the world."

Handy backed the operation plan of Paul Massman, Sesqui General Manager, for locating the Fair on a 200-acre lot and managed by himself and top Government personnel, thus wiping out the need for private corporation.

But according to some executive committee members, no proposal short of a corporation answers the major worry, namely: personal liability in event the Fair is not a financial success or accidents occur.

Will Map Plans

Government attorneys and some Sesqui officials counter this liability question by saying the Government certainly will "stand behind" commission members if claims are lodged against them.

The Federation of Business Men's Associations, Inc., has scheduled a meeting of its Freedom Fair steering committee for 12:30 p. m. Monday at the Lafayette Hotel to map plans for saving the Fair. The association expects to stage another mass meeting Wednesday night at the Hamilton Hotel.

The Sesqui Commission announced yesterday that 21 seamstresses in Williamsburg, Va., have been working since April on 350 costumes for the symphonic drama, "Faith of Our Fathers," scheduled to open in July in the Sesqui's Rock Creek Park Amphitheater. The costumes will be finished by mid-June.

Youth Jumps To His Death Off Bridge

Had Been Sought In Connection With Alleged Attack on Girl

A 16-year-old youth, sought in connection with an alleged attack on a girl, 12, jumped to his death from the South Capitol st. bridge early yesterday, police said.

The victim was identified as Clayton Chambers, jr., of 336 K st. se., by his father, Clayton, sr.

Dr. A. Magruder MacDonald, District coroner, issued a certificate of suicide by drowning.

A bridge attendant saw young Chambers jump into the Anacostia about 1:50 a. m., police said. Harbor police recovered the body, at 2:30 a. m. The boy was pronounced dead at the scene.

The elder Chambers, an employe of the District sanitation department, told police his son was brought home about midnight by a detective from the sex squad. Chambers said the detective asked him to bring the boy to headquarters in the morning.

Members of the sex squad said they had received a call Friday night concerning an alleged attack the boy was reported to have made on a 12-year-old girl.

When the father called police in the afternoon concerning his son's disappearance, they asked him to come to the morgue.

Dun Defended By Stark in Church Row

An Episcopal minister last night came to the defense of the Right Rev. Angus Dun, Episcopal Bishop of Washington, who was criticized Friday for inviting non-Episcopalians to communion services on Ash Wednesday.

A charge of "flagrant disregard" of church doctrine was brought by the American Church Union.

Yesterday the Rev. Leland Stark, rector of the Church of the Epiphany, 1317 G st. nw., and president of the Potomac Branch of the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship, declared:

"This attack upon one of the great bishops of our church represents the action of a very small but highly articulate minority within the Episcopal church.

"To suggest that Bishop Dun faces censure and discipline is absurd, for his action is and will be upheld by the vast majority, both of the clergy and the laity of his own diocese as well as of the whole Episcopal Church."

Bishop Dun invited more than 500 Protestant ministers of the area to participate in the holy communion service February 22 at Washington Cathedral on the theme: "God, Man and the Hydrogen Bomb."

500 New Members to Join Legion at Ceremony Today

About 500 new members will be inducted into the American Legion at a public ceremony today at 3 p. m. on the Monument Grounds.

Main speaker will be Senator Henry C. Dworshak (R., Idaho). Short addresses also will be made by George N. Craig, jr., national commander of the American Legion; Clarence E. Smith, chef de chemin de fer nationale, Forty and Eight; Mrs. Norman L. Sheehe, national president of the American Legion Auxiliary, and Mrs. George N. Huish, chapeau nationale, Eight and Forty.

Preceded by a half-hour band concert, the program will open with massing of the colors followed by raising of the flag and the Pledge of Allegiance. Florence E. Daily will sing the Star-Spangled Banner and God Bless America. The invocation will be given by the Rev. William B. Adams, department chaplain of the District Legion, and the benediction by Rabbi Norman Gerstenfeld.

The induction services are sponsored by the District of Columbia Grand Voiture 174 of the Forty and Eight. In case of rain, the program will be postponed until next Sunday.

Woman Held

Man's Molars, Money, Pants Vanished

Eunice Kay Huff, 32, was held under $1000 bond for action of the grand jury yesterday, charged with stealing the upper and lower dentures, trousers and money of a man she met May 19.

Richard Hockman, 1215 11th st. nw., told Municipal Court Judge Thomas D. Quinn he met Miss Huff at a terminal at 12th st. and New York ave. nw., and took her to his home.

When he woke up early in the morning of May 20, Hockman said, his trousers were missing and with them $10, his false teeth. A woman's skirt and blouse were in his apartment, he said, but Miss Huff had gone.

Hockman said he next spotted Miss Huff at 9:30 p. m. Friday night near 600 G st. nw., and took her to Number Two Precinct Station.

Miss Huff denied being in Hockman's apartment and denied stealing anything from him.

Silver Spring Carnival

An ambulance which will be donated to the Silver Spring Volunteer Fire Department will be on display at the annual carnival of the Silver Spring Lions Club, which opens Monday night and continues through June 11.

Woman Dies In Mattress Fire at Hotel

Victim Identified As Wife of Army Sergeant in Japan

The wife of an Army sergeant stationed in Japan died early yesterday in a mattress fire in her room at the Lee House, 15th and L sts. nw.

Police identified the victim as Mrs. Kathryn McGarvey, 41, whose husband, John, is on duty in Japan. They said the fire apparently started from a cigarette.

A number of hotel guests were aroused by smoke, but the blaze was confined to the dead woman's seventh-floor room.

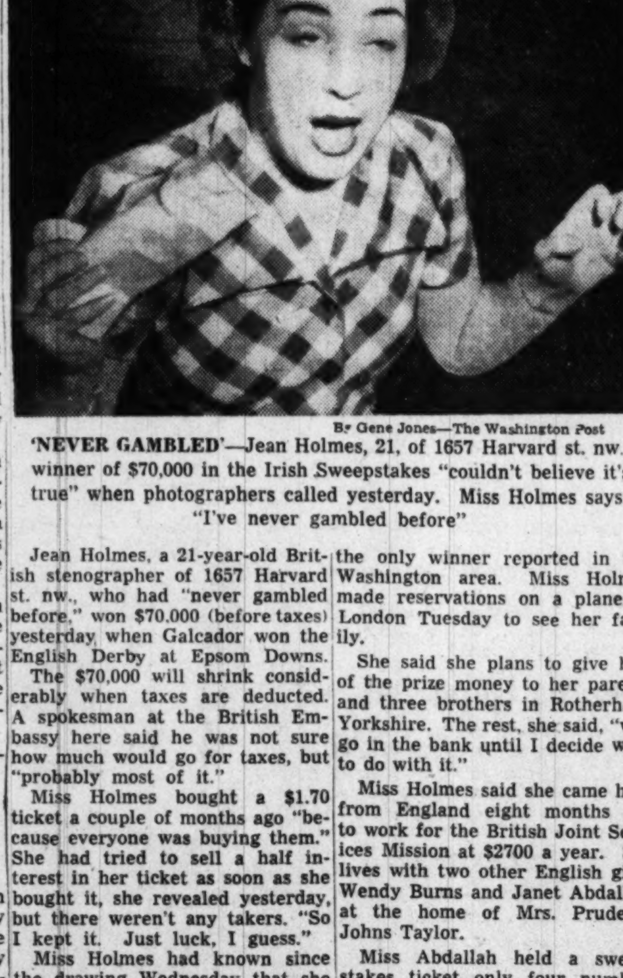
Dr. A. Magruder MacDonald, District coroner, issued a certificate of accidental death. He said death was due to asphxyiation and body burns.

WAC Capt. Mary L. Porter, whose room was directly above Mrs. McGarvey's notified the hotel she smelled smoke.

Hotel personnel broke down Mrs. McGarvey's door. John Helwig, night engineer at the hotel, dragged Mrs. McGarvey's body from the flames.

Police said Mrs. McGarvey returned from Japan a few months ago for treatment of a nervous condition. She had been a patient at Walter Reed Hospital from April 16 until Friday afternoon. The Associated Press said her home was Philadelphia.

Stenographer Wins $70,000 On English Sweepstake Race



By Gene Jones—The Washington Post

'NEVER GAMBLED'—Jean Holmes, 21, of 1657 Harvard st. nw., winner of $70,000 in the Irish Sweepstakes "couldn't believe it's true" when photographers called yesterday. Miss Holmes says: "I've never gambled before"

Jean Holmes, a 21-year-old British stenographer of 1657 Harvard st. nw., who had "never gambled before," won $70,000 (before taxes) yesterday when Galcador won the English Derby at Epsom Downs.

The $70,000 will shrink considerably when taxes are deducted. A spokesman at the British Embassy here said he was not sure how much would go for taxes, but "probably most of it."

Miss Holmes bought a $1.70 ticket a couple of months ago "because everyone was buying them." She had tried to sell a half interest in her ticket as soon as she bought it, she revealed yesterday, but there weren't any takers. "So I kept it. Just luck, I guess."

Miss Holmes had known since the drawing Wednesday that she held a ticket on Galcador, a 100-to-9 shot. So she tuned in to a British broadcast of the race yesterday morning.

She said she heard the announcer say Galcador was in the lead. Then he mentioned Prince Simon, the favorite. Then the station faded out and she missed the finish. Probably just as well. Press reports said Galcador made it by a head. Miss Holmes was the only winner reported in the Washington area. Miss Holmes made reservations on a plane to London Tuesday to see her family.

She said she plans to give half of the prize money to her parents and three brothers in Rotherham, Yorkshire. The rest, she said, "will go in the bank until I decide what to do with it."

Miss Holmes said she came here from England eight months ago to work for the British Joint Services Mission at $2700 a year. She lives with two other English girls, Wendy Burns and Janet Abdallah, at the home of Mrs. Prudence Johns Taylor.

Miss Abdallah held a sweepstakes ticket only four numbers different from Miss Holmes' winner.

Miss Holmes was not sure whether she would collect her winnings here or in England. If she collects it in England, a further question may arise as to whether she could make any use of it while in the United States. England has sharply restricted the amount of money which may be taken out of that country.

D. C. to Ask Budget Cuts Be Restored

$2 Million Bridge Funds Expected; Hearings on Rent Control Postponed

District Commissioners this week are scheduled to ask the Senate to restore a sizeable portion of the 6.2 million dollars which the House chopped from the city appropriations bill for the fiscal year starting July 1.

Almost certain to be restored is a 2 million dollar item for starting the East Capitol st. bridge across the Anacostia River. Funds were stricken by the House pending settlement of the bridge's location, settled last week.

The House trimmed the Commissioners' spending program to $112,850,340, with these departments taking the major cuts: health — $423,800, welfare $568,800, schools $820,400, sewer, $1,044,350, street and bridge agencies, $2,295,800.

The city heads are expected to ask at least partial restoration of the slashes in all these departments.

As regards cuts made by the House in the Highway Department, Director J. N. Roberson Friday sent a report to Engineer Commissioner Gordon R. Young to justify their restoration.

Robertson is principally concerned by the $250,000 cut in street paving funds—$75,000 of which must come off planned channelization projects. He pointed out a great backlog of needed improvements had piled up because the District has concentrated most of its funds on several large construction projects.

District officials also plan to ask Congress to write a $1,405,000 Treasury loan into the pending city budget for a start in expanding the city water supply system.

The way was cleared for a water loan in a measure now before the President. It allows the District to borrow up to 23 million dollars from the Federal Government to improve the water system over the next 10 years.

Representative Oren Harris (D., Ark.) yesterday announced public hearings on a rent-control extension bill have been postponed to June 8. Hearings previously were set for Thursday and Friday.

The Commissioners have recommended extension of local rent control to June 30, 1951 with lifting of curbs this June on non-housekeeping, furnished rooms.

Unless Congress approves the Commissioners' plan, embodied in a bill filed by Representative Arthur Klein (D., N. Y.), controls will go off June 30.

3 Stops Listed For Bloodmobile In District Area

Three stops are scheduled for the Red Cross Bloodmobile in the Washington area this week.

On Monday the car will visit the Wilson Boulevard Christian Church, Wilson blvd. and North Piedmont st. Arlington, from 10 a. m. to 4 p. m. Wednesday, it will be at the Patterson School, S. Capitol and Darrington sts. sw., from 2 p. m. until 8 p. m. The final stop is set for Thursday at the Bladensburg High School, Bladensburg, Md., from noon until 5:30 p. m.

Last week the Washington Regional Blood Center, 1730 E st. nw., distributed 688 pints of blood.

20 Nations to Join In Folk Festival Slated June 4

Folk dancers, singers and instrumentalists from more than 20 countries will take part in the International Folk Festival to be sponsored by the Arlington Kiwanis Club at the Watergate next Sunday at sundown.

Many of Washington's embassies will be represented in the two and one-half hour show, proceeds of which will be used by the Virginia Kiwanis to promote the Kiwanis summer camps, crippled children activities and other aid to underprivileged children.

Advance reservations can be made by writing to Box 44, Folk Festival, Arlington. Tickets will also be on sale at the Watergate Sunday.

PAUL PLUMLEY
. . . traced through car

By Jean Reiff
Post Reporter

With great concern for accuracy the two "false nose" bandit suspects yesterday told United States Commissioner Cyril S. Lawrence they were guilty of three District robberies. They also are wanted in connection with a Clinton, Md., holdup.

They are charged with taking a total of $1756 in the District and $1040 in Maryland.

One of them, 26-year-old Paul Plumley of 409 48th ave., Capitol Heights, Md., faintly praised a witness in one of the holdups for accuracy in giving details.

Commissioner Lawrence held Plumley and the second suspect, Harris Lovett, 27, of the Dixie Hotel, Washington, and Randall Cliffs, Md., for the grand jury under $45,000 bond each.

Both told Lawrence they wanted to go ahead with the hearing.

After Lawrence read the charges against them, Plumley replied candidly:

"Those charges you just read to us are correct, but I want to say that the amount given in those robberies is 'way over what we got."

Lovett did not take the stand. He told Lawrence he thought the "statements" were correct.

The men are wanted by Maryland authorities in connection with the $1040 holdup of a Clinton, Md., general store last Tuesday.

Washington police arrested Plumley and Lovett Friday night on a tip.

First witness against them was Douglas W. Mellott, manager of the Naylor Theater, 2834 Alabama ave. se. His theater, he said, was held up and robbed of $842 April 29 by two men.

One of the two, whom he identified as Plumley wore glasses. The other man didn't, Mellot testified.

Julius Kirson, manager of the District Line Liquor Store, 405 61st se. ne., identified Lovett and Plumley as the men who entered his store April 8 wearing white cloths over their faces.

When Plumley later in the arraignment took the stand, he announced his plea as "guilty on all three charges." He said he would "waive any other hearings."

Detective Sergt. James M. Powell of the robbery squad testified that Plumley and Lovett had been confronted by Kirson and Mellott Friday night. He quoted Plumley as saying that in the liquor store holdup, he and Lovett wore diapers over their faces. Their "take," Powell quoted Plumley, was $184.

In the third District case, two men wearing the "false noses" were charged with holding up the Economy Finance Co., 1430 Florida ave. ne., on May 15. The loot was $730.

One of the firm's employes, William A. Mahoney, testified that the two men were Plumley and Lovett.

Widow and Two Children Share $911,882 Collins Estate

The late W. Hayden Collins, retired real estate man who died at 71, May 9, left an estate valued at $911,882, according to his will filed for probate in District Court yesterday.

Mr. Collins was secretary of the real estate firm of Moore and Hill at the time of his retirement in 1928.

The estate was divided into six equal shares, according to the will, four shares gong to his widow, Mrs. Adrienne Collins, 1613 Harvard st. nw., and one each to a son, B. Perry Collins, of Baltimore, and a daughter, Mrs. Claire Collins Conner, of Midland, Mich.

The estate consists of $860,046 in corporate stocks and $50,836 in cash, the will revealed.

A native of Washington, Mr. Collins was widely known as a boating enthusiast and stamp collector.

County Man Charged in Fight Death Of Soldier

Galen Funkhouser Faces Manslaughter Count as Result of Prince Georges Row

Prince Georges County police yesterday arrested Galen Funkhouser, 23, of Accokeek, Md., on a manslaughter charge in the death last Thursday of a Bolling Air Force Base soldier after a fist fight.

Police said Funkhouser was involved in the fight with T/Sergt. Vernon Staley, 32, in an Accokeek garage. Bolling investigators described it as "a clean fight." Staley died later of cerebral hemorrhage.

Police questioned Funkhouser at the time, and said he told them Staley was the aggressor in the fight. Yesterday Detective Wilson Purdey arrested Funkhouser. He was later released on $500 bond pending a hearing at Upper Marlboro Friday. He is married but has no children.

The Air Force investigation showed that Staley celebrated his birthday Thursday with two other soldiers by having "a few beers." When the trio neared Accokeek, Staley's car ran out of gas.

The other two went to look for gas and when they returned Staley reported having had an argument with a man he said had refused to push his car. When they returned to the garage police said the fist fight followed.

Four Youths Held in County Larceny Cases

Four Bladensburg Junior High School students, ranging in age from 13 to 15, were held yesterday for action of the Prince Georges County Juvenile Court on charges involving more than 20 larcenies and housebreakings.

When they were arrested, they told police, they were ready to run away from home. Detective Earl J. Huber, Corpl. Roland Sweitzer and Policeman Emmett Gray of the Hyattsville substation, Prince Georges County Police, arrested the youths late Friday.

Found cached in a woods were packsacks full of canned goods, bacon, sugar, potatoes and other supplies they bought with money taken from a store, police said.

The youths admitted breaking into the Boulevard Outboard Sales, 4223 Bladensburg rd., Colmar Manor, Tuesday night and taking $7 in cash, four .22 caliber rifles, a flashlight, a fishing rod and reel, a portable radio and other goods.

It was this robbery that proved their downfall, according to the detectives. One of the boys sold a stolen rifle to another teen-ager, police said. The boy took the rifle to J. S. Maggio, owner of the store, having heard of the robbery. Maggio notified police, and one of the quartet was picked up.

The boys also admitted breaking twice into the Bladensburg Junior High School, once taking $25 from the candy closet.

Three were released in custody of their parents and the fourth was held by juvenile authorities. They also admitted larceny of flashlights, in Juvenile Court at Hyattsville, Md.

Julius B. Gay Named Legion's Citizen-of-Month

Julius B. Gay, potentate of Almas Shrine Temple, has been selected citizen-of-the-month by the Civic Relations Commission of the D. C. Department of the American Legion it was announced yesterday.

Gay

The retired poultry dealer received a bronze medal and a citation from Department Commander Charles K. Dunn in recognition of "exemplary leadership in the civic life of Washington during the month of April."

Gay was chosen for his service to the District's underprivileged children. As general chairman of the Ninth Shrine Circus he made it possible for 1500 newsboys and 5000 other youngsters to see the show. He lives at 1650 Jonquil st. nw.

Baby in Critical Condition After Throat Operation

Nine-week-old Barbara Gambrell of Falls Church, Va., was in critical condition at Arlington Hospital last night following an operation to relieve a growth in the throat.

Hospital authorities said the child has a hydroma, a growth similar to cancer, at the back of the throat. It has impeded the infant's breathing.

The infant was in an incubator last night and oxygen was being administered. A hydroma at Barbara's age, the hospital said, is "unusual but not unique."

The infant is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Gambrell of 1008 Birch st., Falls Church. She was admitted to the hospital after the American Legion agreed to back at least part of the cost of treatment.

Rep. Lesinski Dies Of Heart Attack

Representative John Lesinski (D., Mich.), ardent advocate of the New and Fair Deals, died of a heart attack yesterday at his home in Dearborn, Mich.

The 65-year-old wealthy lumberman, who espoused the cause of labor in his 17 years of service in Congress, died of a coronary attack at 1 a. m. shortly after he complained of "breathing trouble."

Mr. Lesinski, who was chairman of the House Education and Labor Committee, had left Washington on Thursday to spend the holiday weekend with his family. He was apparently in good health when he retired at midnight, but around an hour later he called to his wife and said he was having difficulty breathing.

Mrs. Lesinski ran out to get a doctor, and found the Congressman dead when she rushed back to the house.

With rare exceptions, Representative Lesinski was a staunce supporter of legislation proposed by Presidents Roosevelt and Truman. Similarly, he consistently voted "right" in the eyes of organized labor on the controversial labor issues.

Long active in Polish-American and Catholic activities, Mr. Lesinski was sent to Congress in 1933 by the newly formed Sixteenth Michigan District, which includes two Detroit wards and several adjacent communities. He has represented the district ever since.

Although he served for a short period as chairman of the House Committee on Immigration, Representative Lesinski was a relatively unknown member of Congress until he was named chairman of the House Education and Labor Committee when the Democrats reorganized Congress in 1949.

Born in Erie, Pa., January 3, 1885, John Lesinski was reared in Detroit. He attended school there, including Detroit Business University. By the age of 26, he was well established as a businessman, having built 4000 houses in the Detroit-encircled town of Hamtramck. He later established enterprises in nearby Dearborn.

Mr. Lesinski was married three times. His first wife, Stella, died in 1919, and left two children. His second wife, Barbara, died in 1937, and left three children. In 1938 he married Estelle Julia Geisinger, one of his secretaries. They have two children. A brother, Julius of Hamtramck, also survives.

In Washington, Representative Lesinski lived at the Governor Shepherd Apartments.

Card of Thanks

WALDRON—Thanks to all my dear neighbors, friends and family. I would not trade one of you for anything in this world. My neighbors next door, up the street, down the street, across the street, aren't just neighbors; they are a gift from God. My friends, they aren't just acquaintances, they are true friends and also a gift from God. I love you all, and thank you with all my heart for everything.

BEATRICE WALDRON AND SON.

Retired GPO Librarian Dies; Rites Monday

Miss Mona H. MacGregory, 61, who retired last January 31 as librarian of the Government Printing Office's division of public documents, died Friday in the Laurel Sanitarium.

Miss MacGregory, who lived in the Cavalier Apartments, 3500 14th st. nw., had been ill since November. She had been in the division of public documents for about 30 years. She had been its librarian since December, 1940.

Miss MacGregory was a native of Maine and had been on the staffs of the Springfield, Mass., and Waltham, Mass., public libraries.

She continued her library studies at George Washington University and was an assistant at the University's library for two years. Before joining GPO, she was an index cataloguer for the War Department.

There are no immediate survivors.

Funeral services will be held at noon Monday at the Hines funeral home, 2901 14th st. nw. Burial will be in the Cedar Hill Cemetery.

Richard Hevener Dies; Highland County Officer

Hightown, Va., May 27 (AP).—Richard W. Hevener, four-time treasurer of Highland County and president of the First and Citizens Bank and Trust Co. at Monterrey, died at his home here early today.

Prominent in activities in the county for many years, he was the son of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob W. Hevener. Jacob Hevener died last fall.

Correction

A headline in The Washington Post yesterday said the alcoholic beverage license of the Macomb Restaurant, 3238 Wisconsin ave. nw., was suspended for 30 days. This was a typographical error. The restaurant lost its license for 3 days for permitting a drunk to remain on the premises as reported in the story.

The suspension period begins at 8 a. m. June 5. The Washington Post regrets the error.

Shamhart to End Career in Treasury

By Richard Morris
Post Reporter

Ed Shamhart, who has hooked his share of big fish in the rum-running and narcotics rackets, will begin casting for the underwater species come June 1.

The 58-year-old customs official, who likes to "look for the humor in life," will end his 30-year Government career by starting a new one in private.

It has been 30 years—the span of his service as a crime buster on the international plane—since Edson J. Shamhart has worked with his hands.

Put the Finger on 'Em

"Working with his hands" to Shamhart, Deputy Commisssioner of the Customs Service since 1943, doesn't include putting the finger on such notorious prohibition organizations as the I'm Alone and Clark L. Corcum mobs.

It does include fishing and building a house—board by board and brick by brick, without the help of contractors, real estate agents, or bricklayers.

He and Mrs. Shamhart, who live at 1 Scott cir., are heading for Indian Rocks, Fla. on the Gulf Coast. "That's where I started out, and thats the best place to finish," the chunky, spectacled Shamhart said.

Cohorts in hte Treasury Department loaded him with gifts last week, and tossed in a farewell "reception" on the side.

He'll Talk Fishing

One of the presents was a six-foot spun-glass fishing rod and a deep-sea reel. Fishing is one accomplishment, aside from his pre-career days as a housebuilder, that Shamhart will discuss without reluctance.

Otherwise, there's the story of the shotgun blast and the capture of Big Jim Clarke, "a very, very successful rum-runner."

"He wasn't small-time," says Shamhart. "He was a sort of manufacturer's representative."

Switching from a cigar (he's cut down from 15 to 5 a day) to a pipe, Shamhart reeled off a saga of the high seas—the capture of the "I'm Alone" mob—in a mater of minutes.

Ran Scotch Whisky

The I'm Alone was a supercharged 100-foot rig that brought Canadian and Scotch whisky into Gulf or Mexico ports during prohibition.

She flew a foreign flag—that of a friendly nation Shamhart would rather not disclose—but depended on contacts in this country for the success of her infamous voyages.

The Coast Guard Cutter Dexter, Shamhart and his agents aboard, chased the I'm Alone 300 miles, almost to the Yucatan Peninsula, in 1929.

The crew refused to surrender, so the Dexter fired one across the bow. Still defiant, the I'm Alone sped along. A round amidships did the job, and one member of the rum-runners crew drowned.

Officer in World War I

One of the American principals in criminal and civil litigaion that followed was Big Jim Clarke, a rangy "Missouri country boy" who had served as a Naval officer in World War I.

Big Jim was a square-shooter, "a man's man, and yet a very tractable fellow," Shamhart recalls. Yet his downfall was not so much at the hands of men as of "his woman," a beautiful French Canadian femme fatale in Montreal.

Dan Hogan, one of the bigshots in the mob, had been convicted and sent up. Big Jim was at large, spending his time between Central America and Canada

"One day Lu," for it was a gal named Lu, "phoned me from Montreal to get Jim out of jail in New Orleans where he had been picked up for operating an illegal radio."

Trying to Find Him

Shamhart and his boys had been trying to lay their hands on him to get information on his associates.

This looked like the break, so Shamhart highballed it from his Washington offiffice in the Wilkins Building down to New Orleans for a meeting with Big Jim.

"I can't help but see the funny side of it," Shamhart decided to apply "the kind of conniving I like to call psychology." Clark wasn't a "squealer," understand, just a man's man— 6 feet 2, 220 pounds.

Locked Up Every Night

After several days of friendly card games in Shamhart's room—they locked up Jim every night—the time seemed ripe. Shamhart phoned Montreal. Two days later the plucking came about.

"Why don't you drop around to 213, Jim?" Shamhart suggested after a fast round of spit in the ocean. "You know I trust you."

A little persuasion followed—Jim was always primed lest he come a cropper—and the big fellow relented, saying, "I trust you, too, Ed."

"He came back in about an hour a changed man," Shamhart recalls. "He turned state's evidence, and we rounded up the rest of the Americans in the I'm Alone gang."

Historical Tour Features Parks Slate Today

A historical tour of Arlington National Cemetery and Lee Mansion and observation of the moon, stars and planets from Fort Reno Park are the chief features of the National Capital Parks program for today.

Other events include a nature outing to study "pond creatures" at the Kenilworth Aquatic Gardens, a bus outing in the vicinity of Great Falls, Md., a bird walk in the Canal Parkway and a barge trip on the C. & O. Canal. The schedule:

Man Who Owed His Job To Baseball Ready to Retire

William N. Handiboe, who was given a job in the District government 46 years ago because he could play baseball, will retire on Wednesday.

Handiboe

He will leave the position of Assistant Chief Clerk of the Engineer Department the day after his sixty-seventh birthday. In that capacity he has prepared contracts and supervised bidding on District construction for 33 years.

Only a handful of District employes have served as long as Handiboe. But what he remembers best about nearly half a century is the way it started.

He was a good ball player in a day when Government agencies competed keenly for players in their inderdepartmental league. "A player out of the ordinary" said The Washington Post of Handiboe in 1905 after he had pitched, caught and played right field in three winning games on the same day.

A requirement in the Government league was that a man must be employed by a department to play on its team.

One day in 1903 Handiboe filled in for a sick Bureau of Engraving pitcher and won a shutout. Next morning, he recalled yesterday, the manager of the District team—the Commissioners—offered to find him a job with the city. Once he was on the District payroll no other team could get him.

After a fling at professional baseball, the District found him a job as assistant to a construction foreman.

Handiboe recalls he spent most of the time riding his bicycle from one project to another to see if the crews needed anything. "I didn't think I'd last more than four or five days," he said. He stayed there a year, then moved to the clerk's office where he has been ever since.

Handiboe's interest in baseball has waned with the shift in emphasis from middle base running to power hitting. His idea of retirement is to pull up a rocking chair at his home, 2814 5th st. ne., "and sit in it and not even rock."

Gordon MacRae, Arthur Godfrey Danny Kaye—you can see them and many others at The Post's National Celebrities Golf Tournament and the Bob Hope Show. See the Sports Section for ticket information.

If your radio-phonograph is suffering from performance asthma, or if your TV set has spots before its eyes, Campbell's "physicians" can fix the trouble, and have everything working tip-top again in jig time. Our technicians are trained experts. Usually nothing more than a little skilled adjustment is required, but if major surgery is indicated, your set couldn't be in better hands! But don't delay. If you detect any signs of trouble, reach for the phone first thing tomorrow and call DIstrict 8464 and ask for Campbell's Repair Department! Our "ambulance" will be there in a hurry!

Here's the Easy Way to Learn if Your Child Has Musical Talent!

You would be the last person in the world to deny your own child the life-long enjoyment of musical creation, if you thought he or she had real musical talent! But perhaps you feel that finding out would be too long and costly a process.

Here's a simple solution to the problem? Let Campbell's put a brand new, really fine piano in your home for as little as $9.50 a month. Give your youngsters music lessons. If, after a few months, you'd like to own that piano permanently, all rentals paid will apply to its purchase price, and "to-your-measure" terms can take care of the balance.

Come in tomorrow and arrange, through Campbell's popular Rental-Purchase Plan, to find out whether or not your child has a talent for music! By this simple action, you may make a precious lifetime much happier and more satisfying!

Is There a Cure for Worry?

You have probably heard it said that the only remedy for worry is to stop worrying. That sounds easy . . . when you have nothing to worry about. But few people are so fortunate.

Recently, one of our good friends came into the store with his own solution to the worry problem. "The radio-phonograph I got from you last month has literally changed our lives," he said. "After a hard day's work, I relax to the sort of music I love. At bedtime, the whole family joins to hear a 'concert.' The recordings are so perfect, and the reproduction is so fine that we seem to have the world's greatest musicians right there in our living room, performing for us personally. You'd be amazed how much happier and more relaxed all of us are today!"

I recommend this common-sense treatment, not just because good music is our business, but because good music is good business for any family in these tense times. You simply can't worry to good music!

Let Campbell's show you how easily you can learn to play a Hammond Organ

Put One In Your Home For Only $25 a Month

You and your children, without any previous musical training, can learn to play a Hammond Organ in far less time than you may think. To prove this, Campbell's will gladly put a Hammond Organ in your home for only $25 a month. If you decide to purchase, all rentals paid will apply to the low purchase price of only $1300, delivered. Remember: unlike other so-called organs of comparable price, the Hammond, music's most glorious voice, is a complete organ, with two manuals and pedal keyboard. It never requires tuning, and needs no installation and uses less current than a 100 watt bulb. Locate it anywhere, plug it in . . . and play! Come in tomorrow for a demonstration, and then let Campbell's put a glorious Hammond Organ in your home on Campbell's popular Rental-Purchase Plan!

Campbell's Invites You to Play This Beautiful Williamsburg by SOHMER

We would like you to come in and sit at the keyboard of the new Williamsburg by Sohmer. We think that you will be amazed to find a console with so rich and brilliant a tone . . . in every register. The fact is that the string distribution of this Sohmer is more than 85% that of a grand piano.

But, as you will see, this is not the only reason Sohmer is called "The Musician's Console." The action is flawlessly smooth and accurate as well. In every respect but size this IS a "grand."

And as for beauty . . . your own good taste will tell you that the Williamsburg recreates faithfully and authentically the console design of the 18th century. Campbell's is proud to invite you to play the Williamsburg by Sohmer, and is happy to welcome your comparison of this superb instrument with any console at any price.

If you cannot come in for a demonstration, write or telephone for illustrated catalogue.

Business Outlook

By J. A. Livingston

Inflation Is Getting Another Whirl

Livingston

Durable goods fever. That's what this country's having. And the five-year agreement between General Motors Corp. and the militant United Auto Workers Union emphasizes the point. The country is going wild over automobiles, television sets, new homes, furniture, roads, public buildings, sewage systems, and more recently, industrial plant and equipment. Inflation is getting another whirl. G. M. and the UAW simply joined Harry Truman's prosperity parade.

The get-while-the-getting's-good fever resembles 1946 and 1947. Iron Age reports "all major steel items are now in tight supply." Many users regard steel as "better than money in the bank, whether they need it or not." Hiland G. Batcheller, chairman of Allegheny Ludlum Steel Corp., said at the meeting of the American Iron and Steel Institute in New York City that he's sorry he doesn't have 50 percent more capacity for stainless steel. Yet six months ago, stainless was a drug on the market.

Feeling the Fever

That's how fast demand has re-overtaken supply, following the letdown of 1949. You can feel the fever in such recent developments as these:

1. Three United States Rubber Corp. plants are turning out tires seven days a week around the clock. H. E. Humphreys, jr., president, estimates that the total tire sales this year will reach eighty-two million, o rtwo million more than last year.

2. The price of zinc has shot up another half cent a pound to 12½ cents. Since March 14, the price has advanced 2¾ cents.

3. Orders for Douglas fir averaged 253,882,000 feet in April, or 12 percen above shipments of 225,898,000, and shipments are running higher than production.

4. The weekly wage of factory workers in April reached $56.89, highest on record. That would compare with $56.57 in March and $53.80 in April, 1949.

5. Standard Oil of Ohio has just boosted the wholsale and retail price of gasoline a half cent. A similar boost took place May 1. Explanation: Crude oil stocks and refined petroleum supplies are declining more rapidly than last year.

6. And business loans of reporting member banks increased $14,000,000 in the week ended May 17 to $13379.000,000. Last year business loans declined well into July and in 1948 and 1947 into June. Thus this year's upturn, if it lasts, is a bit earlier than usual.

The G. M.-UAW pact is inflationary in its impact. Walter Reuther head of the UAW, has reversed his position of three months ago. Then, he declared he was through with contracts tying wages to the cost of living. That was when the Bureau of Labor Statistics Consumers' Price Index was going down. But now, apparently, Reuther figures the trend is the other way. He's putting his money on higher prices. And if the cost of living rises, increased G. M. pay will put more money into the inflation.

Data: Federal Reserve Board, Standard & Poor's Corp. Prepared for J. A. Livingston

Reuther Promises 'Reasonableness'

In addition to the cost-of-living clause, G. M. is committed to raising wages 4 cents an hour each year through May, 1955. So it must count on business. G. M., incidentally, plumped for a long contract in 1948, but the UAW set a two-year limit. The present contract validates Reuther's judgment.

G. M. undoubtedly has initiated another round of wage increases. The UAW will certainly want higher pay from Chrysler and Ford. The Ford contract is reopenable on wages in January 1951, the Chrysler contract in July 1951. But some of the smaller companies, struggling to survive, may escape with something less. Reuther has anounced he will be "reasonable." Presumably his pattern for the industry won't be inflexible. The steel, electrical, and many other industries may likewise expect to get increased demands.

Wall Street Says Ho-Hum

The stock market didn't get over-excited about the precedent-shattering wage contract. It rallied, then promptly sold off. Though stock prices have advanced to new highs this year, they're still 22 percent below the 1929 high and 6 percent below the 1946 high (see chart). Industrial production, however, is 68 percent above the 1929 heyday.

Investors and speculators, looking six months ahead in the Wall Street tradition, are just a bit squeamish about what autumn will bring. Will the demand for autos and new homes be satisfied after the current rush of buying? That's a question which nobody, least of all a businessman, dare brush aside—notwithstanding the present hell-bent-for-the-November-election buying wave.

Chicago Grain

Chicago, May 27 (AP).—With July soybeans recovering from the relapse of the previous session, all cereals had a healthy look on the Board of Trade today.

July beans regained nearly half of yesterday's 10-cent decline, a move which left this contract with an advance of 20½ cents for the week. Wheat had a steady tone, although losing much of an early gain, while other cereals and lard firmed.

Wheat closed unchanged to ¼ higher, corn was 1 to 1⅜ higher, oats were ⅝ to 1 cent higher, rye was ¾ higher, soybeans were 1¼-3¾ higher and lard was 7 cents lower to 2 cents a hundred pounds higher.

Telephone Net Up 21% Here In 4 Months

By S. Oliver Goodman

Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. yesterday reported a 21 percent increase in net income for the first four months this year.

A rate increase earlier in the year helped boost operating revenues to $12,282,207 for the four-month period, as compared with $11,695,570 in the same 1949 period. Operating expenses advanced to $9,248,054, against $9,178,631 last year.

Another factor was the sharp increase in number of telephones in service. As of April 30, C. & P. had 472,236 telephones here for a gain of 19,985 over last year at the same time.

April net income jumped to $501,284, against $302,342 last year. Operating revenues of $3,207,211 were up $242,250, while operating expenses of $2,249,993 were down $106,762.

Total plant in service at the end of April was valued at $112,178,284, a gain of nearly nine million dollars fo rthe 12 months.

STORE SALES: Washington department store sales in the week ended May 20 trended 5 percent below the same 1949 period, the Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond reported yesterday. This interrupted a recent rising trend. For the four weeks ended May 20, local dollar volume was unchanged from the last year. The Fifth Reserve District showed an 8 percent slump for the week and a 3 percent dip for the four-week period. For the year through April, store sales here were reported 2 percent below the corresponding 1949 period.

NEW DIRECTORS: Doren D. Vest, president of Washington Chapter, National Association of Cost Accountants, yesterday announced appoints for the year beginning July 1, as follows: H. J. Althouse, publicity; B. W. Cochran, publications; S. Curran, education; P. Imsler, special activities; V. M. Johnston, membership; W. A. Melhorn, meetings; S. C. Spears, employment; B. C. White, program, and R. C. Williams, attendance. White also will serve as editor of the Monthly Newsletter.

LEAGUE MEETING: Executive Council of the D. C. Building and Loan League will hold a joint luncheon meeting Tuesday with members at the Mayflower. Highlights will be showing of Treasury Department film "Let's Sell Independence," and a talk by Admiral Richard P. Glass.

WHO'S WHO TODAY: Marshall Hurt, formerly with a New York advertising agency, has joined Lewis Edwin Ryan Advertising, Washington, as an account executive . . . G. Guy Via has retired as director of education and training at the Newport News Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co. after 36 years service . . . Herbert D. Ford, Washington sales manager of American Airlines, will discuss "Airline Organization" before the transportation school of the Army at Fort Eustis, Va., on Thursday . . . Gulf Oil Corp. has elected F. J. Adams, B. C. Belt and P. H. Bohart as new vice presidents . . . Benton and Bowles, Inc, advertising agency, has elected Brown Bolte, John Cobbs, jr., and Alan Sidman as vice presidents.

DIVIDEND: Directors of Consolidated Gas, Electric Light & Power Co. of Baltimore declared a 35-cent dividend on common shares, payable July 1 to holders of record June 15. The stock was recently split 3-for-1. On the old shares payments were 90 cents quarterly.

STOCKHOLDERS: A study of 50 selected companies by the New York Stock Exchange showed an increase of about 61 percent in stock ownership in the last 20 years. In the May issue of The Exchange, an analysis disclosed that stockholders in 50 corporations totaled 4,432,640 at the end of 1949. This compared with 2,755,352 at the end of 1930. The figures do not provide for any duplication of ownership. Posing the question: "How many stockholders in American industry are there?" the study commented: "Stock market statisticians have frequently used 15 million as a 'reasonable' estimate in a field practically impossible of exact calculation."

ODD LOTS: The first carload of the 1950 crop of winter wheat reached the Kansas City market yesterday . . . Frank D. Newbury, former vice president of the Westinghouse Electric Corporation, is the author of a recently published textbook, "The American Economic System" . . . Claude W. Duke of Richmond, Va. announced yesterday that Norfolk would be the eastern seaboard distributing headquarters for French Renault automobiles. . . Factory sales of household washers in April totaled 333,072 units compared with 423,802 in March, second highest total on record, according to the American Home Laundry Manufacturers Association. . . Bigelow-Sanford Carpet Co., Inc. has introduced a hard twist carpet woven from a blend of synthetic and wool fibres.

EARNINGS: Net income of the Seaboard Air Line railroad in April was $836,836, almost double the $423,494 reported in April last year. The April 1950, total includes an accrual cancellation credit. Gross revenues in April were $11,400,220 against $11,305,805 for April 1949. For the four-month 1950 period, the net was $2,676,111, compared with $1,835,772 for the 1949 period. Gross revenues in the first four months of this year were $43,605,376, against $46,630,421 last year. Other earnings reports follow:

Stocks Record Small Losses in Dull Trading

New York, May 27 (AP).—The big bull stock market of 1949-50 had a mild case of cold feet this week—nothing serious but enough to cause a little head-shaking among the financial experts.

On only one day during the week did the market make any progress. Declines were small, though, and at the final bell Saturday the price level was only a trifle below the four-week peak touched a week earlier.

The market's failure to continue an advance that started nearly a year ago coincided with a heavy flow of excellent business news and predictions.

Nobody seemed very much surprised that the market refused to get excited about the business news.

Rubber issues also showed impressive strength, aided by rising prices for rubber products and high demand.

Brokers and their customers today were more interested in getting away for a long weekend than in stock trading. Sales volume dropped to only 470,000 shares, smallest for any short session since late November last year.

The market will open Monday but close Tuesday in observation of Memorial Day. Some traders evidently took off for a four-day holiday.

Next Saturday the market will be closed as the exchange starts on its summer schedule. Saturday closings will extend from June through September.

Saturday's market was more or less typical of trading earlier in the week. A fair play was given such usually neglected stocks as Sunshine Mining, U. S. Plywood, White Sewing Machine, and Childs.

Sales volume dropped below two million shares every day in the week.

HOW $20 SPENT HELPED ME GET A $2000 RAISE

By a Wall Street Journal Subscriber

About a year ago I began to keep my employer informed on price trends of raw materials and merchandise. Later, I told him about a new invention that affected our business. One day I pointed out a change in the tax law that saved our company money.

All of this information I found in the pages of The Wall Street Journal. I feel that The Journal is primarily responsible for increasing my salary by $2000 annually. Yet my subscription to The Journal cost only $20.

This story is typical. Because the reports in The Wall Street Journal come to you DAILY, you get the fastest possible warning of any new trend that may affect your business and personal income. You get the facts in time to take whatever steps are needed to protect your interests, or to seize quickly a new opportunity to win advancement. You are promptly and reliably informed on every major new development relating to: Prices, Taxes, Consumer Buying, Inventories, Financing, Production Trends, Commodities, Securities, Marketing, World Trade and New Legislation.

The Wall Street Journal is the complete business DAILY. Has largest staff of writers on business and finance. The only business paper served by all four big press associations. It costs $20 a year, but you can get a Trial Subscription for 3 months for $6—77 issues (in U. S. and Possessions). Just tear out this ad and attach check for $6 and mail. Or tell us to bill you. State Debt Reaches Peak at 4.1 Billions

New York, May 27 (AP).—The gross debt of the 48 States has reached an all-time peak of $4,100,000,000, the Tax Foundation reported today.

The foundation, a private, nonprofit research organization, warned that the State debt "probably will go higher before it turns down."

A survey on the postwar trend in State debt showed that the States owed nearly a half-billion dollars more at the end of fiscal 1949 than they did a year earlier, when all obligations totaled $3,592,000,000.

Describing the present fiscal condition of the States as still "relatively healthy," the foundation cautioned that if their debt continues to pile up at its present rapid rate, "their solvency can be wiped out by the first tremor of an economic recession."

From a prewar peak of $3,600,000,000 in 1940, State debt declined to a low of $2,400,000,000 in 1946. This decline was the result of curtailed wartime construction projects.

The primary source of debt since 1946 has been veterans' bonus bonds, issued through fiscal 1949 by 10 States in a total amount of $1,400,000,000. The study indicated that the financing of postwar construction of projects delayed during the war was not so important and a factor in the recent rise in debt.

"Whatever the specific reasons for increased State debt, the trend among many State administrations," Tax Foundation commented.

Maryland Tobacco

Baltimore, May 27 (AP).—Average prices advanced for a large majority of grades sold on southern Maryland auction tobacco markets this week.

The U. S. Department of Agriculture and Maryland State Department of Markets reported volume of offerings was fairly heavy.

Auction net sales totaled 3,482,620 pounds averaging $48.91 a hundred—an increase of 71 cents over last week. Quality of marketings was poorer.

All groups of nondescript showed gains in average prices. Most grades moved up 1.00 to 3.00 a hundred pounds. Larger increases occurred for several offerings, chiefly green tobacco.

Sales volume fell around 415,000 pounds when compared with the outturn during the previous week. Season auction net sales reached 12,968,840 pounds for a return of 48.56 a hundred. This compared with 13,331,687 pounds sold during the same period a year ago for an average of 52.59.

Percentage of fair and low qualities increased this week. There were more tips and less thin crops offered. Around 7 percent of net auction sales was delivered to the Maryland Tobacco Cooperative under the Government loan program during the week.

Net receipts of the Baltimore hogshead market for the season were reported as around 2,398,000 pounds. This combined with net auction sales amounts to approximately 15,367,000 pounds, indicating that about 37 percent of the 41-million-pound crop estimate has been delivered to market.

Auction bid averages per hundred pounds on a limited number of representative U. S. grades were as follows:

HEAVY CROP—Good cherry red 66 for week ending Thursday, up 1 compared to previous week: fair cherry red, 59, up 2; fair red, 36, up 1; Fair green, 18, unchanged.

TIPS—Fair cherry-red, 46, up 1; fair red, 29, up 2; fair green, 14.50, down 1.

THIN CROP—Fine cherry red, 69, unchanged; good cherry red, 68, unchanged; good red, 67, up 1; fair cherry red, 67, up 1; fair red, 63, up 1.

SECONDS—Fine cherry red, 66, unchanged; good cherry red, 65, up 2; fair cherry red, 58, up 2; fair red, 48, up 3.

Prospectors Seek Manganese In Russell County

Lebanon, Va., May 27 (AP).—Two Ohio men reported today they have prospecting leases on more than 5000 acres of manganese-bearing land in Russell County.

The report was made by Clyde S. Mellott and Joseph Guido, partners in the Industrial Minerals Co. of Steubenville, Ohio.

They said the so far undeveloped Russell manganese field "is believed to be the largest of its kind in the United States."

Mellott said ore samples were found to contain an average of about 48 percent manganese.

They said they have started negotiations with several steel companies and with one large chemical company, looking toward development of the field.

Negotiations with landowners for mineral rights are expected to begin within 60 days. The present agreements are lease options which cover prospecting only.

New York Cotton

New York, May 27 (AP).—Cotton futures closed irregular today with prices 30 cents a bale lower to 15 cents higher. Price movements throughout the session were narrow and confined to a range of 30 cents a bale. Trading volume was the lightest in many weeks.

Most of the activity involved evening-up operations for over the weekend. Traders' comment was that the market was a preholiday affair.

The Cotton Exchange will now be closed on Saturdays during the summer until September 9.

The range follows:

Raise in Pay

Kann Offer Is Accepted By Workers

AFL warehousemen have voted to accept a new contract with S. Kann Sons Department Store calling for a $2.50 across-the-board weekly raise in pay, it was announced yesterday.

Frank W. Gibson, executive manager of Local 730, of the AFL Teamsters Union, said the membership voted unanimously to accept the agreement.

The pay raise and other benefits for the 80 employes who work at the service building, Delaware ave. and C st. sw., is effective as of May 17, according to Gibson.

The union official said the contract, to run for a year, also provides 2½ paid holidays, and time-and-a-half pay for time worked over 40 hours a week, except during 12 "peak" business weeks.

4 Students Booked In 'Bomb' Incident

Evanston, Ill., May 27 (U.P.).—Four Northwestern University students, who, police said, admitted touching off a sulphur fumigating bomb to "wake up" members of a rival fraternity, today were booked on State charges of disorderly conduct.

Fumes from the bomb in Sigma Chi house yesterday sent 36 persons to the Evanston Hospital. Those booked are Albert W. Franzheim of Wheeling, W. Va., and Richard H. Scobell of Northbrook, Ill., both 22, and Henry J. Shotters of Chicago and John R. Hartman of Rochelle, Ill., both 21.

Man Seeks $104,000 for Fire in 1906

A San Francisco resident whose grandfather lost his business in the famous 1906 fire has filed suit here to recover $104,880 in damages.

The petition, filed by Edward F. Braunschweiger in the U. S. Court of Claims, asks that the Government make good a $38,000 fire insurance claim—plus interest for 44 years—on the grandfather's liquor business, destroyed by fire.

Braunschweiger says most of the insurance was held by a German company, which defaulted. Other claims by American companies were paid off after the fire, he said.

In his petition, he argues that American ownership of German properties growing out of World War II would justify a judgment.

An attempt to settle the matter in Congress failed when a committee told Braunschweiger it had no authority to settle claims dating before 1934. He says now that it's in court, at least he can get a "yes or no answer."

Permanent Group to Combat Negro Moves to White Areas

A permanent, city-wide organization to combat the movement of Negro families into white communities was formed here last night.

Twenty persons, representing nine citizens' associations, voted to make the organization permanent at a meeting at 2020 Rhode Island ave. ne.

Freeman A. Weiss of 3223 Vista st. ne., who was appointed temporary chairman at a previous meeting of the group, was empowered to appoint an executive committee to set up means of carrying out the purposes of the organization. He was instructed to call another meeting in two or three weeks.

The resolution, which calls for incorporating the group, was submitted by Clifford H. Newell, president of the Arkansas Avenue Community Citizens Association.

Newell said the executive committee should be able to stimulate enough interest to get "thousands and thousands of members into the organization."

George W. Absher, of the Hillcrest Citizens Association, said that whites, who, he said, "are being discriminated against on every side," need an organization like the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Weiss said the new group might distribute leaflets similar to the one he prepared for the Greater Woodridge Land Covenant Alliance, Inc., a Northeast Washington group which led the movement for the city-wide organization.

John H. Connaughton, former president of the Federation of Citizens Associations, charged that Washington newspapers were publishing lies in their descriptions of the racial situation in Washington.

San Diego Journal Suspends Publication

San Diego, Calif., May 27 (AP).—The San Diego Daily Journal today suspended publication, 6 years and 2 months after it was founded.

John A. Kennedy, editor and publisher, said the name, circulation lists and publishing rights have been sold to the San Diego Union Tribune Publishing Co., which publishes the evening Tribune and the morning Union. Kennedy said the increase in publishing costs has risen twice as fast as income. The Journal had 200 employes.

Heroic Teachers Cushion Fairfax School Crisis

(First of Two Sunday Articles)

By Agnes E. Meyer
Post Reporter

"THE $10,500,000 bond issue for school construction must get the approval of the voters on Wednesday, May 31. The future of our children and our county is at stake."

With this remark a mother, whose child attends the Lee-Jackson Elementary School, summed up a lengthy discussion of the educational problems of Fairfax County.

"The physical conditions in most of our schools, the overcrowding, the lack of modern equipment, of instruction materials and of such simple necessities as adequate toilet facilities and a good water supply, could not be more distressing.

"But my child is happy at the Lee-Jackson School, and the other children are, too, because Mr. H. H. Burks, the principal, has a wonderful staff of teachers. The situation is not fair to them but by devotion to duty and long hours of work, they try to conquer their appalling handicaps. It is a triumph of mind over environment. Our public school teachers will certainly get the front seats in Heaven."

It is no exaggeration to say that the educational system of Fairfax County works as well as it does, only because of heroic efforts on the part of the school authorities and the constant cooperation of parents who are trying to make the best of an extremely critical situation.

But at present Fairfax County has no plans whatsoever to house a minimum of 2500 and a possible 3000 children who will be ready for school next autumn. For even if the bond issue wins the approval of the people next Wednesday, as expected, it is estimated that the preparation and marketing of the bonds will take a minimum of two months. The contractors say that they can build cinder-block schools within 90 days. Thus, if the weather is favorable, Fairfax County will have some new classrooms at the beginning of the year. But the construction of high schools and other more permanent structures will take much longer.

The immediate problem, therefore, is what to do about the two or three thousand children who may be roaming the streets this autumn with no place to go to school unless some solution is found for this alarming situation.

Social Stalemate

THE HISTORY of the school system in Fairfax County is a perfect illustration of the social stalemate that exists in many parts of our country, when a government created for earlier days is suddenly overwhelmed by the needs of a technological era and a rapidly expanding population.

Virginia is proud of being called "the cradle of democracy." But the State Constitution has prevented the infant from growing up. If the State had deliberately set out to kill the grass-roots independence that is the essence of democracy, it could hardly have invented a more effective device for doing so than its system of legislative and judicial domination of the counties.

Virginia's county government has been criticized by the citizens ever since the adoption of the State Constitution in 1902. As far back as 1928 a report to Governor Byrd said: "The present county government has no responsible head; it is without a chief administrative officer and the board of supervisors controls through appointment only a small part of the county administration . . . The voters of the county have very little power in the determination of county policies."

As a result of the distressing school situation, the desire for independence has grown more acute in the last two years. The wide and enthusiastic support of the bond issue is but one symptom of local impatience with the overcentralized State government.

The citizens of Fairfax County being deeply disturbed by their critical school situation, a School Emergency Committee was formed with Mr. W. Alvord Sherman as president, to put over the $10,500,000 bond issue for school construction.

Under the leadership of Mr. Newell Blair, vice president of this committee, 2000 more signatures were obtained for the petition above the required 1000. There can, thus, be no doubt that the Fairfax citizens are willing to bear a much greater share of the cost of improving their school system. The committee members knew that there would be no difficulty in floating the bonds at a favorable rate. The credit of the county is good, as its borrowing power has scarcely been tapped.

After much hard organization work to obtain the signatures to the bond issue, Falls Church and Alexandria filed their petitions for the annexation of additional county territory. The Commonwealth Attorney, Hugh Marsh, and John Alexander, attorney for the Fairfax County School Board, doubted the wisdom of holding the election on the bond issue because the bonds might not be salable while this litigation remains unsettled. However, since the Annexation Court ruling on the Sanitary Bond issue, that the court had no jurisdiction to look into the validity of these bonds, Mr. Alexander was free to decide that the same ruling applied to the school bond issue. On May 15, Fairfax County Circuit Court Judge Paul Brown fixed the election for May 31. The bond issue has the approval both of the Board of Supervisors and the Board of Education.

There is a rumor around Falls Church of so-called double taxation in the event that this city should win its annexation suit. The problem is confused by some people to mean that individual taxpayers would be responsible both to the city and to the county. The answer given me by a tax expert is that if annexation takes place, the real estate involved is absolved from any county debt and is liable only for city debts.

Doubled in 3 Years

THE heavy population influx that has burdened all the governments and the tax resources of the counties in the metropolitan area of the National Capital was delayed in Fairfax County, the real estate men told me, because the public schools, the water supply and the sewer systems are still in a primitive condition in many areas. When heavy building began three years ago, the volume was not as great as that of some other counties. But the impact of 13,481 family units since 1947 up to April 1, 1950, or about 47,000 people, is a far more serious problem for a county that had a population of only 40,000 in the last census (1940). It means that the normal county population was more than doubled in the last three years. There are all sorts of estimates of the present population, ranging from 85,000 to 120,000.

The average increase in the school population up to 1947 was at the normal rate, less than 500 pupils per annum. But the next year it was doubled; in '48-'49 it trebled; last year it was almost 2000, and next autumn it will be at least 2500. When school opened last September, the school population was 13,173. By April 1 it was 14,512, more than 1300 additional pupils in seven months. They are still coming in at the same rate.

The Fairfax County school system consists of four white high schools, 27 white and 10 Negro elementary schools. It has 460 teachers, an average pupil load of 33, a figure which is more serious than it sounds because so many of the classrooms in the old buildings are designed for 20. There is no high school for Negro children. They travel from 14 to 30 miles back and forth to Manassas every day.

Three of the high schools, at Falls Church, Mount Vernon and Fairfax, are large, modern structures that are, at present, not overcrowded. The front part of the Herndon High School is old and the classes are spilling into the science rooms and the new home economics building. None of the high schools will graduate the full senior class this year, as a 12-year school program was adopted in Fairfax County four years ago. This retention of the senior class plus the normal influx from the elementary schools will overcrowd every high school. But the high school situation will not be as serious as that of the elementary schools, especially for white children.

2237 in Makeshifts

THE Negro population has been static in Fairfax County for many years. Although all but one of the Negro elementary schools are deplorable, no Negro child is on double shift.

On October 13, 1949, Mr. W. T. Woodson, Superintendent of Schools, reported that 2237 elementary school children were attending classes in 76 temporary classrooms, in quonset huts, partitioned auditoriums, libraries, principals' offices, clinic rooms, basements, storage rooms, churches and buildings in trailer camps. Then 442 children, now over 500, are on double shift.

From 1940 to 1948, the county spent $2,800,000 to purchase sites and construct 153 classrooms, which took care of its normal increase in pupil load. Last year it was able to add only four 4-room schools although the increase in school enrollment since 1948 was over 4000.

Many of the Fairfax County schools are old, rooms are small and often they lack modern sewers and water supply. In a school at Bailey's Cross Roads, the principal, Mr. H. J. T. Webner, remarked that his six-room school, built in the early part of the century, has less floor space than is now considered necessary for a modern first-grade room. As his pupil load increased, the well which is the only water supply was deepened three times. But here, as in the McLean, Vienna and other schools that depend upon well water, the supply runs out toward the end of the school day.

By cutting up the auditorium, by using every other available inch of space and putting the first grade on double shift, 10 classes are now conducted at Bailey's school in nine rooms and a quonset hut for about 300 children. In other words, in this old school, almost 300 children are being educated in an amount of space which in a modern school would serve 30. Music lessons are held in the cellar furnace room.

Daily Influx

SO concerned were the parents of Bailey's Cross Roads to know the actual state of affairs relative to the future school population in their district, that some 50 resident taxpayers took a census of the neighborhood under the sponsorship of the Parent-Teacher Association and the local Women's Club. They found a potential school population of 1465 between the ages of 1 and 16, of whom 941 are of pre-school age. Four hundred and seventy new housing or apartment units will be occupied before September, not counting the 1400 units of the Williston Apartments on Lee Boulevard.

The committee appealed to State Senator Andrew W. Clarke for help in securing a new site and money from the 45-million-dollar State grant for school construction which the last General Assembly voted at the request of Governor Battle. The Fairfax County School Board could not at that time earmark any part of the State fund for a given school district. "It has long been known that the present school at Bailey's Cross Roads is grossly inadequate," said the committee, "and immediate steps must be taken to avoid the compounding of an already intolerable situation."

New children are coming into Bailey's school at the rate of seven per day. What staggers Mr. Webner, and the committee that made the school census, is the fact that the Williston Apartments on Lee Boulevard with 1400 units is rapidly filling up. Hundreds of families already have moved in. Before autumn, all of the units will be occupied!

Mr. William Magazine, who has built the Williston project, foresaw the school impasse and set aside seven acres of ground for a school building. He has tried to make arrangements with the Fairfax County School Board to construct a four-room school which the board will take over within three years. He assured me that with proper financial safeguards, he is willing to make it an eight-room school. Even eight rooms will be a tight fit for 2500 children, which is now the normal figure for 1400 young families. A third of them will be of school age.

Without the cooperation of this apartment-house landlord, the situation would be hopeless. But the school board, like all other Fairfax County government agencies, has very little freedom to act. Mr. John Alexander, attorney for the Board of Education, has not yet solved the legal technicalities that impede the deal.

Two County Patterns

THE structure of Bailey's school is typical of one of the two patterns frequently repeated in Fairfax County. It has two wooden staircases that meet halfway up and run to the second floor in a single, somewhat broader flight. When these old schools held but a few children, this arrangement was not ideal; but in an overcrowded building, it might well be a serious fire hazard.

The other typical pattern has a narrow front door and corridor leading into an auditorium with doors on each side to the various school rooms. As these auditoriums are now cut up into classrooms with another class on the platform, the overcrowding of such antiquated school structures is a serious responsibility in spite of many fire escapes. As one teacher remarked: "It is doubtful whether these buildings could meet the requirements of modern factory inspection authorities." But children have no labor unions to protect them. They are still subjected to unsafe, unsanitary conditions in many public schools that remind me of the horrible sweatshops we have abolished in industry.

The Groveton Elementary School, of which Mr. Emmett M. Day is principal, falls into the second of these typical school structures. In addition to the old six-room building, it consists of five other structures—a four-room "black building," so-called because it is a flimsy structure covered with tar paper; a "white building," which is an old two-room wooden school, formerly abandoned; and three quonset huts to take care of the overflow. All the 663 children in these five buildings use the toilet facilities in the main school, planned to accommodate 210. The extra buildings are all heated by coal stoves.

The routine administration in these scattered structures is not easy, but Mr. Day is an experienced teacher with the cheerful patience that is characteristic of most veterans of that noble profession. He gets the most out of his teachers. He himself works even longer and harder than the long day and the constant effort demanded from the staff.

"The work need not suffer seriously," he declared, "because the environment is primitive; overcrowding, of course, cannot be conquered, and it is bound to affect us all. Yet our school has the highest record of the five schools that feed into the nearby high school. My staff is wonderful and the parents are thoughtful, considerate and helpful."

When Mr. Day was forced to use quonset huts, he got the teachers to point out their advantages to the community. Instead of complaining about these structures, the children competed to get into them.

But the optimism of these valiant American educators cannot wholly compensate, as Mr. Day admitted, for the disadvantages to which most of the Fairfax County elementary school children and their teachers are subjected.

Sleep at Their Desks

IT was possible to check the positive influences of a good environment, when I visited the Annandale Elementary School, of which Miss Ethel Sims is principal. This school has a normal capacity of 250, and there are 429 pupils. The classes range from 28 to 41 in some of the largest rooms. There are two classrooms in the auditorium, one on the stage and one in a quonset hut. As there is no cafeteria, the food is moved on trays from the kitchen to the classrooms.

Some of the first-graders come in by bus at 8 o'clock and wait until 4 o'clock before their bus can leave, as this school is the transfer point in a complicated transportation system. Eight hours at school and another hour of travel is too much for the little first-graders. As there is no space even on the floor for them to rest, they put their heads down on their desks and go sound asleep.

With these conditions at the old school in mind, I visited the new airy and spacious four-room annex at Weyanoke, which is typical of three other buildings completed this year. These teachers had moved with their classes to their new quarters from the old school and were therefore able to compare the pupil reactions under the old and new environment.

Though none of the teachers was prepared for my question, their answers were almost identical. The children had calmed down notably. As the tensions under which they had lived gradually disappeared, their achievement had improved. One case, a child who had been almost out of control in the old building, was now so adjusted to the group and to her work that she had become a leader in the class. The teachers, likewise, had benefited from the change in atmosphere and felt that they, too, were doing a better job for the children.

P-TA 'Scrubwomen'

THE work of the Parent-Teacher Association is invaluable in a hard-pressed school system such as this. In fact, were it not for the devotion of these organizations, the Fairfax County schools could not function as successfully as they do. "We are supposed to be interested in educational problems," said Mrs. Hugh McDiarmid, president of the county P-TA, "but the school situation is so grim in Fairfax County that we are scrubwomen and general utility people. In many a school the P-TAs have furnished the cafeterias with tables, benches and chinaware and bought all the kitchen equipment. We also buy the playground equipment. These chores either had to be done by the local community or they were not done at all.

"In a school system so hard pressed for funds that children must rent their textbooks and the schools must buy their textbooks from the rentals obtained from the pupils, there is no money to equip cafeterias and playgrounds.

"Our principals are good people and keep the teachers happy under terrible difficulties. But our minimum teachers' salary, which will be raised to $2200 next year, is lower than that of many nearby school systems. This means our schools break in young teachers only to see them move on to communities that have a higher salary scale. The turnover is very high. Naturally, we have to use some teachers who are not too satisfactory.

"Some of the Federal workers who moved in lately and have their own ideas about the education of children are apt to hound the life out of these less satisfactory teachers. Such parents don't understand that you can't impose modern methods on a teacher who is not used to them. But she can get good results if the parents leave her alone and let the principal bring out such gifts as she has. Even though our teachers are of mixed ability, we have a majority of good ones, and when they get settled in the county, they stay with us."

Another excellent example of voluntary effort that has been of great value to the Fairfax school system is the health clinic first instituted at the McLean school during the war under the leadership of Mrs. Arthur Gardner. This program has gradually spread through the county and made the teachers and the parents more aware of the physical and emotional learning needs of the child. Everyone agrees that these clinics and the school lunch program have had a marked effect upon the health of the children.

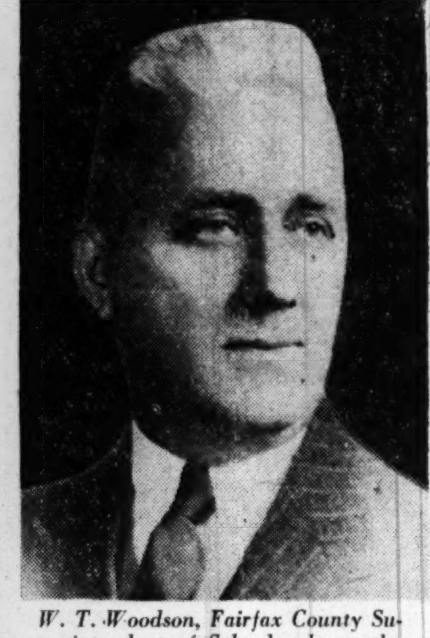
Five Excellent Schools

LET me not give the impression that all of the Fairfax County elementary schools are as ramshackle as the old ones I have described. In addition to the four four-room schools already mentioned, there are five excellent ones such as the new Oak Street School built two years ago, of which Miss Audrey Snodgrass is principal.

This school has spacious classrooms and corridors. Above all, it has adequate toilet facilities and a large modern cafeteria. Its pupil load has jumped from 437 to 783 in a single year. The first and second grades are now on double shift. Two temporary classrooms have been cut off the cafeteria, and the library is occupied by another class. But in spite of this pupil overload, the atmosphere is not as tense in these modern schools. There is so much space that one does not get the impression left in my memory by the old schools, of children stepping on each other's heels and sitting in each other's laps.

There is also one excellent Negro elementary building, the James Lee School at Falls Church. And even the Gum Springs Elementary School for Negroes, a frightful old wreck that has outdoor privies and no running water, does not make the distressing impression of the old overcrowded white elementary schools, simply because the children still have room to move about.

As long as human beings have a little space around them, their dignity can be preserved. But herded together like cattle, they become faceless numbers rather than individuals.



W. T. Woodson, Fairfax County Superintendent of Schools, shares the credit for raising the salaries of his teachers beyond those of any other Virginia county except Arlington

Mr. W. T. Woodson, Superintendent of Schools in Fairfax County, the Board of Education and the Board of Supervisors deserve credit not only for the $2,400,000 construction program completed in 1948, but for raising the teachers' salaries beyond that of any Virginia county except Arlington.

I am amused when I read that New York City school teachers are fighting for a $600 raise and refuse to do any work, including correction of papers after school hours, until their demands have been met.

If any teachers had the right to strike, surely it would be the overburdened, underpaid teachers of Virginia. In Fairfax County in 1939, the teachers had an annual salary of $942.21. This year, with the minimum at $2100, the average salary, including all supervisors, is only $2513.41. The State average, including administrative personnel, is $2350, which is $150 lower than the lowest salary of the embattled New York teachers. Yet the Fairfax County teachers toil uncomplainingly from 8 a. m. until 5 p. m. and even 6 p. m. at the schools and often spend their evenings doing paper work.

Moreover, the New York City teachers would be horrified if they could see the inadequate school buildings, the lack of modern equipment, of free textbooks and other instruction materials, of office space, rest rooms and of the most elementary sanitary facilities with which most of these Fairfax County teachers contend day in and day out. No one would expect Virginia to pay New York salaries, but the gap between the best and the poorer school systems in our country is inexcusably wide.

On top of all their usual disadvantages, these patient Fairfax teachers are now flooded by a population influx with which neither the State nor county resources, whether of money or of leadership, seem able to cope.

At best the schools in Fairfax County would find it difficult to absorb the deluge of children from the new housing developments. With so many old, small and inadequate buildings, the results are heartrending.

Hardest Pressed School

HARDEST pressed by the building boom is the Lee-Jackson School at 3300 Duke St., just beyond the outskirts of Alexandria, of which Mr. H. H. Burks is principal. Its plan is the old impractical type in which the classrooms empty into the auditorium. Each classroom has unventilated clothes closets. The deeply worn wooden stairways, the crumbling plaster, the battered desks exude a pathos that pervades the whole building.

The membership, or attendance, at this school was 300 in 1945 and dropped in 1946, indicating that the first big population influx in Fairfax County began later than that of other metropolitan counties. This year the attendance has reached 690, or an overload of 400 pupils, and more are coming in every day. The classes now average 37 pupils.

In addition to the hazards of overcrowding, this school has a furnace under the auditorium where two classes are now in session. The teachers' room at the end of the hallway also has a class. The basement cafeteria is, in fact, the only space which is not constantly filled with desks and children.

Mr. Burks showed me the official records, which indicate that the achievements of his pupils are well above the national average. Better clews to the work carried on under these difficult circumstances are the quality of the human relationships between teachers and pupils and among the pupils themselves, the spontaneity of the children and the enthusiasm of the mothers. Six of these mothers were replacing the teacher in the classrooms the day I visited the Lee-Jackson School. Mr. Burks enriches the basic school curriculum with music and art instruction. He uses the special training and talents of his regular staff for these activities. While these teachers are instructing other groups, their own classes are supervised by volunteers from the local P-TA.

The Lee-Jackson School would become part of Alexandria if that city's annexation hopes are realized. Only 193 of the pupils live in the disputed area, whereas 400 would still be in Fairfax County and would have to pay tuition, as Groveton, the nearest elementary school, is already overcrowded.

Two of the sixth and seventh-grade classes of the Lee-Jackson School are held in the community house of the nearby Temple Trailer Village, where 325 families, about a thousand people, live as permanently as the folks who prefer a more old-fashioned abode.

These children lose about an hour of every school day because the community house is in use every evening. They put all their materials away at night and take them out in the morning. They spend another half-hour going to the main school for lunch and back. These youngsters, a very bright lot, are not to be pitied. They love the informal atmosphere of their curious schoolrooms and do exceptionally good work.

A Bit of Garden

WHILE talking to the women of Temple Village in the communal laundry as they washed their clothes, I discovered the fascinations of life in trailer communities, of which there are 11 in Fairfax County, with a total of 810 families. "We don't want to live in crowded apartment houses," said these mothers, "where the children have no place to play, nor in the housing developments where you can't even grow a garden to suit yourself. Here we can not only plant the flowers we prefer around the trailer, but the management gives us each a vegetable plot in an adjacent field.

"This is a friendly community in which we plan our own entertainment at the community house. The big boys have a baseball diamond, and the little ones a fine playground where we mothers take turns watching them. We and our children are free people and have more community spirit than the people who live in houses or apartments." These reasons for the popularity of trailer life should give the real estate companies and the Federal Housing Authority something to think about.

Mrs. E. J. Chapman, wife of a Navy officer, who manages the Spring Bank Trailer Park at 1744 Richmond Highway, assured me that Federal workers and military personnel who have to move frequently, feel much more at home if they can live in the same trailer than if they have to take new and often unsatisfactory living quarters at every new post. It seems that many more trailer colonies are needed in Fairfax County because the existing camps, or parks as they are now called, turn away hundreds of applicants every week. The trailer camp managers pay a tax of $50 a year on each trailer space.

1500 More Every Year

THE full tragedy of the Fairfax County school situation cannot be better illustrated than in the 8-mile radius of the Lee-Jackson School. With Mr. Burks, the principal, as guide, I canvassed all the communities, old and new, within the school's orbit. We found that there will be a minimum of 1500 more children of school age next autumn in this area alone. Moreover, there will be at least that many more every year for years to come, even if the county should issue no more building permits. The immediate problem is what to do with these 1500 children and at least a thousand more in other parts of Fairfax for whom there is literally no place in the county's elementary schools. For the county at present has no plans for the construction of a single new school this autumn.

To be sure, private schools are springing up like mushrooms as a result of this fantastic situation. Some of them are good and many of them are just parking lots for the surplus child population, as Virginia has no legal control over their standards. But they represent no solution for the great bulk of the incoming Fairfax school children who will be roaming the streets this fall unless some solution is found for this paralysis of government initiative and just plain common sense.

3700 in One Spot

THE GREATEST single addition to the Lee-Jackson School population will come from the Shirley Duke Apartments, with 2112 units, which will be increased eventually to 3000. Mr. L. J. Brosmer, manager of these apartments, told me that families are moving in this week. About 300 units will be ready this month and thereafter 100 units will be completed every week. By August it will be fully occupied. As the applications are from young families, that means a minimum of 3700 children.

Fortunately the management of this apartment is socially minded. Less than 20 per cent of the 100 acres has been used for construction. Behind each block of apartments is an acre or two of play space. At the top of the rising ground, eight acres of land have been set aside for a 30-room elementary school. For reasons I shall describe in my next article, Fairfax County has no funds available for immediate use for school construction.

As Mr. Burks and I painted this picture to Mr. Brosmer, we were all three a little dazed by the possibility of an impending debacle. We saw no other solution than a financial arrangement between the county and the Shirley Duke Construction Co. similar to that under consideration with the Williston Apartments, whereby the company could proceed at once to build a school which the county could acquire at a later date.

What an ignominious predicament for an American county, when it has to depend on the good will of two private builders to acquire the only schools that can possibly be ready in Fairfax County by autumn.

Four factors have contributed to the school burdens of Fairfax County: the expansion of the Federal Government, whose employes have spilled into the metropolitan area of the Nation's Capital; the unprecedented birth rate; the fact that parents want a better education for their children; and, finally, a complex political situation which has inhibited rather than encouraged local initiative and voluntary action.

My final article will analyze the frustration of the popular will that takes place, and the unnecessary suffering that is created when a State and county government are not geared to cope with the dynamic problems of our postwar social upheaval.

Light Finally Shed on Some of the 5-Year-Old Amerasia 'Mysteries'

By Alfred Friendly
Post Reporter

MOST, although not all, of the long-standing "mysteries" of the Amerasia case find their explanation in the publication last week of a 1946 House subcommittee inquiry into the affair.

The transcript of those hearings, long kept secret, was inserted in the Congressional Record by Representative Sam Hobbs (D., Ala.), chairman of a House Judiciary subcommittee. It reveals, principally, why it was that the Justice Department, which thought it had an "airtight" case of espionage, was able to obtain only trifling fines against only two people, and only for the crime of unlawful possession of Federal documents.

It also reveals what a thin case, if any, the department had on three of the six persons who were arrested.

It does not reveal, however, why the prosecution of the sixth person, Lieut. Andrew Roth, was dismissed.

His Own Words

THIS is the background:

An expert in the Office of Strategic Services noted in the January 26, 1945, issue of Amerasia, a relatively obscure, small circulation magazine, an article on Thailand. The OSS man realized that the article could only have been taken from a classified report which he himself had prepared.

Frank Bielaski, head of the OSS special investigative force, was asked to look into the matter. He broke into the New York offices of the magazine the night of March 11. He found a large photo-duplicating setup and literally hundreds of classified Government documents, from the State Department, OSS, Office of Naval Intelligence, British Intelligence and G-2, classified all the way from merely "restricted" up to "top secret." He took a dozen or so of the documents as evidence, hoping that, from among so many, they would not be missed for some time.

His chief, Gen. William J. Donovan, at once brought the matter to the attention of the Secretary of State, Edward Stettinius. The State Department informed the FBI, which placed the editor of the magazine, Philip Jaffe, and the coeditor, Kate Mitchell, under intense surveillance.

After several weeks, the FBI concluded that the principal people associating with Jaffe were Lieutenant Roth, an officer on the Japanese Fleet desk of ONI; Immanuel S. Larsen, a "China expert" in the State Department and a former ONI employe; John S. Service, a State Department Foreign Service officer, recently returned from a long tour of duty in China on the staff of Ambassador Patrick J. Hurley, and Mark Julius Gayn, a free-lance magazine writer in New York.

1700 Papers Found

ALL six were arrested on June 6. Some 1700 Government documents were discovered in the Amerasia offices and in the apartments of Gayn in New York and Larsen in Washington. None was found in the possession of Roth or Service.

Kate Mitchell, Gayn and Service asked to appear in their own behalf before a grand jury. In the case of each, a "no true bill" was returned. (Senator Tydings (D., Md.), who has been studying the case, said last week that the grand jury vote refusing to indict Service was unanimous.)

Indictments were returned against Roth, Jaffe and Larsen, not for espionage but for unlawful possession of Federal property. Jaffe pleaded guilty and was fined $2500. Larsey pleaded nolo contendere and was fined $500. This was in the fall of 1945.

In February, 1946, the Justice Department dropped its prosecution against Roth.

Not Even a Hint

WAS something wrong here? Many people thought so. Representative Dondero (R., Mich.) introduced a resolution for an investigation. A House Judiciary subcommittee, with Hobbs as chairman, began hearings in May, filed its report in October, 1946.

The majority report held that the Government officials had done their duty and that there was "no evidence, nor hint, justifying adverse criticism of either grand jury, any prosecuting attorney, FBI, judicial, or other official."

Senator McCarthy (R., Wis.), in his charges of Communist infiltration of the State Department, revived interest in the Amerasia case, and Hobbs finally made public the record of his investigation.

There follow some of the major questions about Amerasia and the answers that the record discloses.

WHY WAS there no prosecution for espionage? After all, the FBI found that Jaffe had a long list of left-wing affiliations. He had frequent and long contacts with Earl Browder. The Amerasia office had a photo-duplication setup larger than the little magazine could conceivably need. The inference was obvious. Why was nothing done about it?

Part of the answer is found in the record of the Hobbs subcommittee; the rest in what it does not include.

Whatever inferences may be drawn, the fact is that the record of the case includes no evidence of intent by any of the defendants to injure the United States or help a foreign power. Neither does it include any evidence of transmission of the documents or information to agents of a foreign nation.

Both of these aspects must be present and demonstrable if the charge of espionage is to be sustained.

WERE the documents found in the Amerasia offices and the apartments of Gayn and Larsen particularly "hot"? Would their disclosure endanger national security?

With respect to most of them, the answer seems to be in the negative. They were classified as confidential and secret, to be sure, but it would have been hard to convince any jury that their disclosure would, in fact, have markedly injured this country.

What happened, the testimony suggests, is that some of the really "dangerous" documents were the ones taken by Bielaski of the OSS, and that others he said he saw were gone by the time of the FBI arrests. Those siezed illegally—the Justice Department word for it was "burglarized"—could not be used in evidence and could not even have been referred to in any trial.

WHY DID the Justice Department agree to such light punishment for Jaffe and Larsen? Even granting that espionage was not to be proved, it was clear that this was a nasty business. If the documents Jaffe had were not very important, it was nevertheless true that the operation was such that he could have acquired almost anything, as subcommittee members pointed out. Jaffe was getting documents wholesale, and the evidence showed that Larsen and perhaps Roth were giving them to him.

PHILIP JAFFE
. . . drew a $2500 fine

There are a couple of answers. They do not contradict the observations in the paragraph above; they run, rather, to the legal side of the case.

First, two witnesses told the grand jury that at least some of the documents found by the FBI had been properly declassified by the ONI. James P. McGrannery, then Assistant to the Attorney General, told the Hobbs subcommittee that this "let the air out of this thing very badly, very badly."

Second, and more important, the Justice Department admitted that the investigation was "clumsily handled" and implied that it was lucky to get any conviction at all. Here is some of the testimony to the subcommittee:

"Mr. McGrannery: I think it might be fair to tell this committee who blew the case up and, really, what knocked whatever value the thing might have out in the air.

"One of these gentlemen (Larsen), whose apartment had been entered, and whose material had been seized, by chance one day said something to his janitor (about) being suspicious that somebody had been in there; he said, 'How many times did you tell me that man went into my apartment?'

'The janitor became muddled and confused and told him, thinking that he had slipped before. So the cat was out of the bag so far as he was concerned. He immediately gave that to his lawyer, and our department was quite fearful that they were going to move right then and there."

Actually, Larsen's lawyer did move, to suppress the use of illegally obtained evidence and to allege trespass and wiretapping. In such a situation, it might have been impossible to obtain any conviction at all.

The testimony continues:

"McGrannery: We held one fellow (he is referring to Jaffe's lawyer) in our office to get the plea of guilty from him. The deal was made there. If we had not handled it in that way, I do not think we would have any case at all. None of this evidence was obtained in a manner in which we ordinarily would get it.

"It was very clumsily handled. That is my candid opinion of it.

"This one bird (Larsen) was smart enough to develop a little technique of his own. We, for a while, thought we had no case at all; not only that, but we thought our faces would be very red by their beating us to the punch."

WHO were Jaffe's principal suppliers of the documents? According to R. M. Hitchcock, special prosecutor of the Amerasia case, all the State Department documents that could be traced came from Larsen. Three of the documents were in Roth's handwriting. An FBI witness testified that Jaffe paid Larsen about $75 a month.

Larsen, however, insisted to the subcommittee that the money from Jaffe was solely for nonclassified information about Chinese personalities. Larsen, as a vocation-avocation, had kept a biographical card file on some 6000 Chinese.

WHAT was Service's role in the case?

The testimony suggests there was no criminal case against Service of any sort. He was in China at the time of the original OSS raid on the Amerasia office.

According to James McInerney, principal officer of the Justice Department's Criminal Division:

"The evidence on Service was thin. They said there was in Jaffe's office, as I recall it, copies of his confidential reports. When we arrested or made the searches we found copies of his report. We interviewed Larsen, and Larsen admitted he had given Service's copies to Jaffe, and Service had not given them."

After his return from China, Service was authorized to discuss the situation there in lectures and in newspaper interviews. He was introduced to Jaffe by Roth, and gave him copies of some of his recent reports which he had also shown other newspapermen. Service has declared that he associated with Jaffe in the belief that Jaffe was acting simply as the editor of a magazine devoted to Far Eastern affairs.

WHY was the prosecution against Lieutenant Roth quashed by the Justice Department?

The Hobbs hearings provide little or no answer. McGranery intimated that the trespass on Larsen's — and presumably on Jaffe's — apartment jeopardized the whole case, including the prosecution of Roth, but the reasoning is unclear. The subcommittee never exacted an explicit answer from the Justice Department witnesses.

WAS there something "fishy" about the prosecutor's subsequent employment? Hitchcock later joined a law firm, one of whose senior partners was Kate Mitchell's uncle. The insinuation has been made that the job was a "payoff" for failure to present a strong case against the defendants.

According to Representative Hobbs, Hitchcock went back to Buffalo, his home, to work in the United States Attorney's office, after his special job on Amerasia. In December, 1946, a year after the Amerasia case, "he was probably the outstanding Federal trial attorney in Buffalo."

He was approached by a Mr. Bass, one of the partners in the "outstanding" law firm of Kenefick, Cooke, Mitchell, Bass and Letchworth. Bass asked him to handle the "portal-to-portal" cases with which the firm was then inundated.

Hitchcock, according to Hobbs, told Bass he had been connected with the prosecution of the niece of one of Bass' partners. He was hired by the firm in January, 1947.

Hobbs continued, "Hitchcock was asked whether or not Mr. Bass ever informed his partner, Mr. Mitchell, about Mr. Hitchcock's connection with the Amerasia case. Mr. Bass states he does not have any recollection of having informed Mr. Mitchell of that fact and explained that at that time he was not on very good terms with his partner, Mr. Mitchell, and the likelihood is that he did not."

Burst on Him Like Bombshell

FRANK BIELASKI, the OSS investigator who raided the offices of Amerasia magazine in March, 1945, testified three weeks ago to the Tydings subcommittee investigating charges by Senator McCarthy (R., Wis.). McCarthy said Bielaski would testify that:

"The people who operated Amerasia, with the assistance of Sate Department personnel, were collecting and transmitting to Soviet Russia the secrets of the atomic bomb."

Bielaski, questioned briefly by reporters about McCarthy's preview of his testimony, demurred at the word "transmitted," but conceded "there was something to the atomic aspect."

Before the subcommittee, in closed hearings, it was learned that Bielaski said he remembered seeing a paper in the Amerasia office the night of the raid with the word "A-bomb" written on it.

Four years ago, a year after the raid itself, Bielaski's memory was not so good on this point. In secret testimony to a House investigating committee, made public last week, Bielaski said:

"We found (in the raid) six top secret documents of the Navy Department. I looked at these myself. I do not recall all six of them."

He went on to describe two that he remembered. Then he said:

"I might say, off the record, at that time I did not know anything about the atomic bomb. I had never heard of it.

"I have since been very curious trying to wrack my memory whether there was anything in those other four top secret documents. It would not have meant anything to me if it had . . . I do not remember the other information. We did not take the documents. We put them back where we got them."

How a Union Earned Own Pay Raise

By Gershon Fishbein
Post Reporter

SOMETHING new has been added to labor-management relations.

In Baltimore, union milk drivers are busily signing up new customers for their Green Spring Dairy employers in a unique demonstration of good will and good sense. So far, the cooperative effort has saved about 600 jobs for the AFL International Brotherhood of Teamsters, more than $100,000 for the dairy and a $75,000 annual account for an enterprising Washington advertising man.

In March, the Baltimore local won a National Labor Relations Board election entitling it to organize the 200 driver-salesmen and 200 plant and garage workers at Green Spring, Baltimore's second largest dairy.

When the union presented its wage demands, Dairy President James J. Ward, sr., balked, contending that the firm would be ruined financially.

Ill will followed. Contract negotiations stalled. On March 17, a strike developed. It lasted only a few days before a contract was signed calling for $120,000 in wage and other benefits—more than the annual net profit of the dairy.

Ward and his son, James, jr., vice president and manager, looked for places to cut, as any practical businessman would do. The possibility that 600 jobs would be affected presented a serious problem to union and management alike. Another likely economy was the $75,000 annual advertising contract held by M. Belmont Ver Standig of Washington.

New England Example

VER STANDIG came up with an idea. Thirteen years ago, he recalled, the New England town in which he was a newspaper publisher was threatened with bankruptcy when the town's only factory couldn't meet a union contract. Then the only solution was some vigorous labor-management cooperation plus a little head-knocking.

Why, he asked himself, couldn't the same kind of cooperation work in this case?

Disregarding the fact that such things may have been outside his province, Ver Standig arranged meetings with union and sales representatives. Nothing was said to the Wards.

At the meetings, Ver Standig had to call on all the persuasion a successful ad man must have. He wrote all the speeches for these meetings, finally working up to his clincher: the Wards' warning at the time of the contract signing that "more sales is the only thing that will save Green Spring's neck—your neck and my neck."

A handshake—and twin "15 in 3" buttons—unite James J. Ward, sr. (left), Green Spring president, and Tom Healy, president of Teamsters Joint Council 62

Said Ver Standig: "The management should not be made to suffer for signing a good union contract. Yet here is Green Spring Dairy, after signing the best contract any dairy union has, actually threatened with folding up because of that contract. That's not good union practice. That's not good management practice."

The '15 in 3' Plan

IN TERMS of dollars and cents loss to all concerned, the union quickly got the point. Tom Healy, president of Teamsters Joint Council No. 62 and a veteran labor man, pledged the union's cooperation. What finally evolved was this:

Each driver-salesman was to go out and get 15 new customers for the dairy in the next three months. Housewives, friends, business associates—all have been fair prey for the drivers as they made their rounds, order blanks in hands. Wearing big yellow buttons reading, "Got It? 15 in 3," the union men have been doing a powerful job for the company—and themselves.

Drivers worked on restaurants and grocery stores. Their wives operated in their bridge parties and social clubs. After two weeks of the campaign, one man scratched his head and said, "Even my bookie buys Green Spring milk."

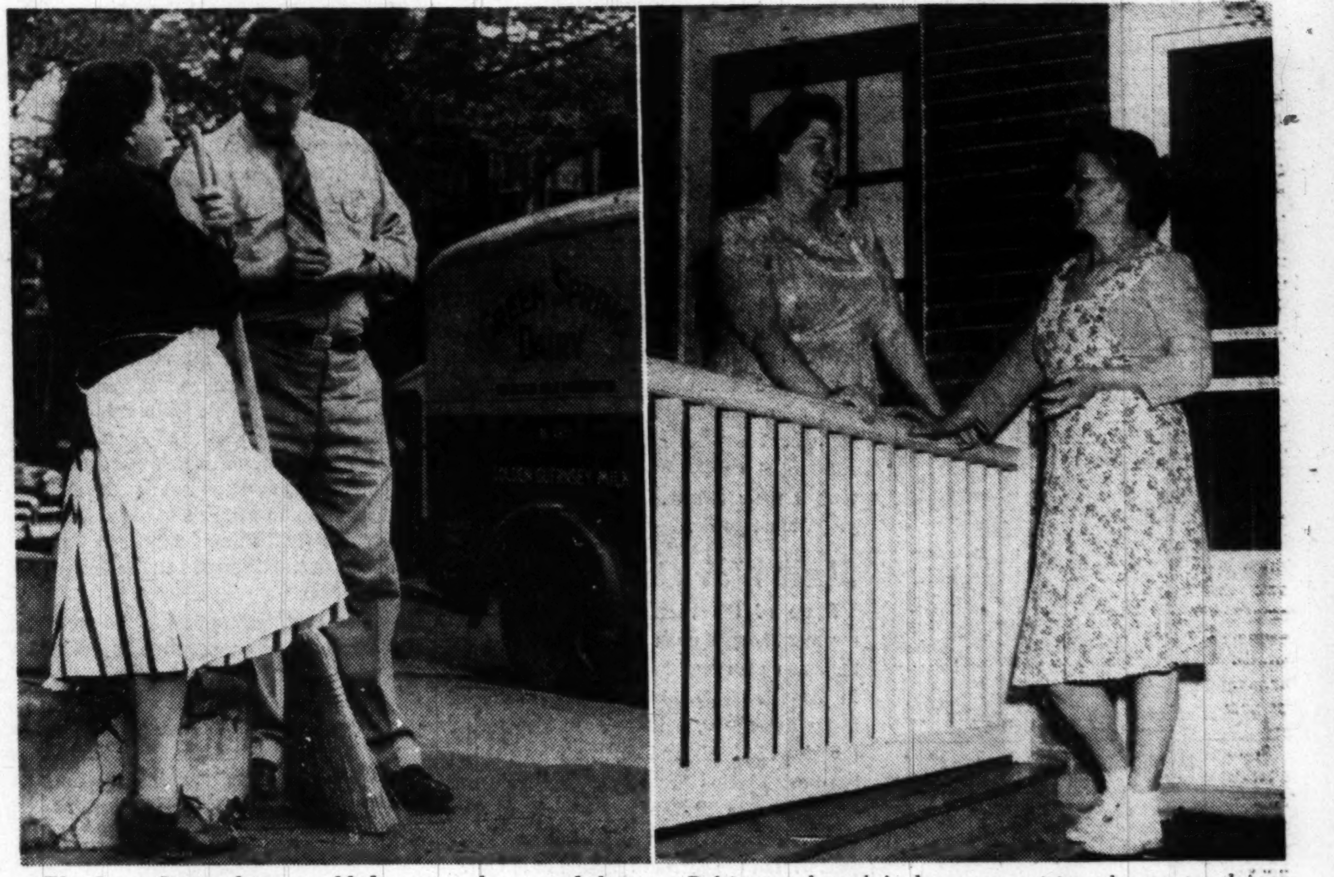
By late April they figured it was time to let the Wards in on the deal. So, with Ver Standig's cooperation, they arranged a banquet at Baltimore's Southern Hotel, where for the first time the dairy owners were apprised of the plan.

At the banquet, each driver made his formal pledge of at least 15 new customers to compensate the firm for the pay raise. Already, 11,000 new customers have been brought in by the union. The drivers' goal is 16,000, but they won't stop at three months. They plan to continue the arrangement all year 'round.

Now everybody concerned is happy. Said Ward, sr.: "In the past couple of weeks, I think we have all come a long way toward a better understanding of each other . . . not only as workers together in the same enterprise, but as human beings. Perhaps there has not been enough recognition of each other as human beings in the past. Perhaps we have all thought too much about each other as machines doing a job than as men and women working to make life easier, and the world a better place in which to live."

Said Healy: "Back in 1907, when we were having our heads broken with baseball bats, if anybody had ever told me that I would live to see the day when a group of union men gave a banquet for the boss, I'd have laughed in his face. But I'm glad that I have lived long enough to see it. Because I think that here and now may be the turning point in union-management relations.

"Here is concrete evidence that unionizing need not cause hard feelings. Unionizing need not end the 'family relationship' between all the people working together in the same place. Unionizing need not penalize management and need not cost anybody anything."

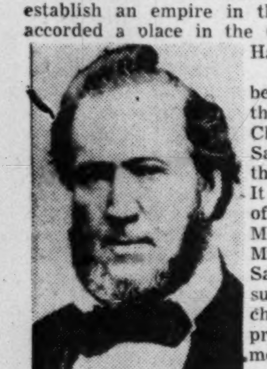


The Green Spring drivers tackled anyone who crossed their path, and their wives worked on their neighbors and afternoon bridge partners. Left, James O. Miller, jr., a Green Spring route salesman, convinces Mrs. Mary Goorevitz of Baltimore that she's been patronizing the wrong dairy. Right, Mrs. Margaret Auvil (right), wife of the dairy's night superintendent, makes a new customer of her North Wheeler ave. neighbor, Mrs. Mary J. Stevens

Mormon Empire-Builder to Have Niche at Capitol

By Martha Hall
Post Reporter

BRIGHAM YOUNG, who led the Mormon trek across the continent to Utah to establish an empire in the West, will be accorded a place in the Capitol's Statuary Hall Thursday.



BRIGHAM YOUNG

The statue of the bearded leader of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is a gift of the people of Utah. It is the work of one of his grandsons, Mahonri Young, and Mrs. Mabel Young Sanborn, 87, only survivor of his 56 children, will be present for the ceremony.

It was Brigham Young, then 43, who took over the leadership of the new religious sect after Joseph Smith, prophet and first president, was felled by an assassin's bullets in a jail at Carthage, Ill., in 1844.

Under Young's leadership the Saints, like the Israelites of old, marched west across uncharted territory to establish a thriving settlement in the arid valleys of Utah.

As a colonizer, Young was perhaps without parallel in American history. In a desert nobody wanted, he established in 30 years more than 350 towns.

11 Days of Schooling

YOUNG was born in Vermont in 1801, and had only 11 days of formal schooling. He was 30 when he first read the Book of Mormon, which Joseph Smith claimed to have received from a heavenly messenger, and on the basis of which Smith established the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

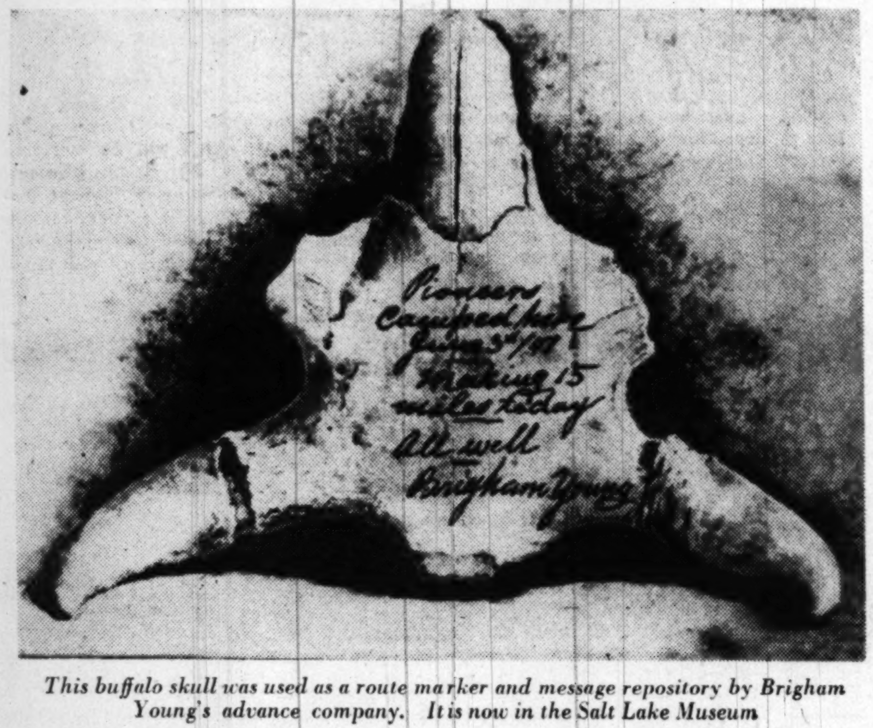
Young followed Smith as he led the Mormons from settlements in Kirtland, Ohio, to Independence in Jackson County, Mo., to Nauvoo, Ill. After Smith's death, hostility against the Mormons flared up again, and Young, after discussing it with the other church officials, decided that the Saints must move on to a place where they could live their own lives.

Leading an advance company to Council Bluffs, on the banks of the Missouri, Young began a practice that was to be the salvation of the thousands who followed. A small settlement was established and crops were planted to be harvested by those who came later.

By December, 1846, more than 3000 persons were at the settlement, living in log houses and sod huts. The following month, Young announced his plan for the mass movement westward. The group, he said, was to be organized in companies, with captains of hundreds, fifties and tens.

"Let each company with their captains and presidents," he wrote, "decide how many can go next spring; then choose out a sufficient number of able-bodied and expert men to take teams, seeds and farming utensils, to go as pioneers to prepare for putting in spring crops."

Each company was to share its resources equally in caring for the poor, the widows and the fatherless.



This buffalo skull was used as a route marker and message repository by Brigham Young's advance company. It is now in the Salt Lake Museum

Took Root Rapidly

YOUNG led the first company of 143 men, three women and two children out of winter quarters. It was July 24 when the caravan rolled into an arid, treeless valley and Young declared, "This is the place." Within hours the company had begun plowing the hard earth and flooding it with water from City Creek Canyon. Next morning the pioneers had potatoes in the ground.

Young stayed only a month at the new settlement before returning East on horseback to organize the rest of the company. On the way he met some 1300 Saints toiling westward.

Again the next spring he led a caravan across the rugged country. There were 1229 persons, 397 wagons, 74 horses, 19 mules, 1275 oxen, 609 cows, hundreds of sheep, pigs, chickens, cats, dogs, goats, geese, beehives, doves and a crow.

Back in Salt Lake City, the great tabernacle, which took 40 years to complete, was begun. There were no nails, and the timbers were fastened together with wooden pegs and lashed with rawhide thongs.

A Thriving Empire

DURING this time Young was the political, economic and religious ruler of an area larger than Texas. He had his own newspaper, his own small army, and the Mormons were united behind him.

His missionaries labored in the East and even abroad to get more people to the Western Zion. Saints, in companies with the proper balance of farmers, tradesmen and laborers, were sent into the wilds to establish new communities patterned after Salt Lake City.

But trouble was in the air. Back East there were rumblings about the Mormon practice of plural marriage and the rule of the Utah theocracy. The Mormons protested against the territorial officials sent out by Washington.

Polygamy had been an excuse for the persecution of the Mormons all the way across the country. According to his granddaughter, Young himself found it difficult to accept the idea at first. But it was the law of the church, enunciated by the Prophet, and at his death he was said to have at least 16 wives and 56 children.

The 'Mormon War'

WHETHER it was because of this practice or for some other reason has never been clear. But in 1857, just 10 years after the first settlement at Salt Lake City, President Buchanan ordered an army of 2500 men into the territory and named a new territorial governor to succeed Young. The "Mormon War" was on.

Young declared martial law and sent out a force of his own to delay the "invaders" by scorched-earth tactics. The Federal force halted for the winter at Fort Bridger, Wyo., and Young prepared for the worst.

"I want you to cache our grain and lay waste to this territory," he said, "for I am determined, if driven to that extremity, that our enemies shall find nothing but heaps of ashes and ruins."

The preparations proved unnecessary. The new governor entered the city without the Army and was peacefully received and recognized. The President "pardoned" the Saints and they permitted the Army to settle on the salt flats west of the city.

Later, when President Lincoln was asked what he intended to do about the Mormons, he is reported to have said, "Tell Brigham Young that if he will let me alone, I will let him alone."

Young died in 1877. In 1890, Church President Wilford Woodruff succumbed to Federal pressure and abolished the practice of plural marriage. In 1896, Utah was admitted to the Union.

Secret Red Paper a Best-Seller in Iran

By W. G. Dildine

Mr. Dildine, a member of the Cleveland Plain Dealer staff, is in Iran on a Reid Fonudation fellowship.

TEHRAN.—One of the most-sought-after newspapers in Tehran is a secretly printed, single-sheet tabloid called Mardom (The People).

Passed from hand to hand in streets, tea houses and bazaars, it is read not only by members of the outlawed Communist Tudeh Party, of which it claims to by the official organ, but by thousands of other Iranians.

Before Tudeh was driven underground, Mardom was a recognized daily with an estimated circulation of 15,000. Ettela'at, leading daily in Tehran, is believed to have about the same circulation.

Iranian officials estimate that Mardom, which now makes its devious appearance weekly, still has a circulation of nearly 10,000. Individual copies probably reach far more people than would be the case in America.

The inevitable rumor is that Mardom is printed in the spacious compound of the Soviet embassy. It is priced at 5 rials (about 15 cents). Other Tehran newspapers sell for 1 to 2.5 rials. Copies of Mardom have been known to change hands for as much as 20 rials.

A Religious Twist

THE UNDERGROUND paper carries the usual Communist denunciations of the government and of America and Britain. The May Day issue also contained a curious bit of religious propaganda.

May 1 is the birthday of Ali, revered by the Shi'a Moslem sect, Iran's state religion, as the true successor of Mohammed. Beside Mardom's standard May Day proclamation appeared an article hailing Ali as the protector of all who suffer injustice. True followers of Ali, said Mardom, will not wait for deliverance from oppression, but will rise and shake off their chains. Thus Mardom transformed a Moslem saint into a revolutionary device.

Other secretly printed papers turn up in Tehran from time to time. One of them, Razm (Thunder), a Tudeh youth organ, is reported to be popular in girls' schools, as the party makes capital of the feminist issue.

A hand-written paper called Democrat, which recently began appearing in Azerbaijan, shows some talent for poetic imagery. It speaks of "flowerlike children" starving and dying, of jobless young men "melting away like ice in the summer sun."

A copy of Democrat circulated during the visit of Gen. J. Lawton Collins, American Army Chief of Staff, said, "We consider this visit as ominous and owlish. Go back, General Collins, thou owl of war, hunger and death!"

Subsidies Rumored

MOST other Tehran papers are anti-Soviet in tone, and Russian releases get little space. Two of them, however, the daily Dad (Justice) and the weekly Iran-i-Ma (Our Iran), plug for closer relations with the U.S.S.R. Sources here say there is evidence that the Soviet and satellite embassies offer material aid to newspapers which will follow an anti-British, anti-American line.

There are also a half-dozen mushroom papers which come out with an occasional single issue designed for some specially violent attack on the government.

In general, the press here is remarkably free, but Iranian police are alert to any evidence of control by foreign interests or by the native Communist movement.

Gauging the effect of Red propaganda is difficult even for experienced observers here. Certainly it is considerable enough to provide an uphill fight for Americans who are sincerely trying to help the Persians solve their economic problems without interfering in politics.

Apparent Victors

ON THE surface, the battle of news appears to be won by the Americans, with British collaboration. A good share of space in the Tehran newspapers goes to United States Information Service releases and copy from private American and British wire news services.

Daily news bulletins in several languages from the American and British information services are seen everywhere. Storekeepers even have found that the tough mimeograph paper is good for packaging eggs.

Tass, the official Soviet news agency, rates little space here. Soviet information service activity appears to be rather listless, though VOKS has two Tehran centers. Soviet film activity is negligible, and the information bulletins published by the Russian embassy are poorly distributed.

The Soviet propaganda technique is selective, however, intended to mold a tough nucleus of devoted followers, ready to take over key posts when the call is sounded.

The way of the western nations is to show, by simple contrast and without overt propaganda, the advantages of democratic institutions.

A 'Bad' Word

USIS officials here have a delicate task. They must avoid any appearance of wishing to shape the course of Persian affairs. They must refrain from open criticism of the Iron Curtain countries. While engaged in what is very close to being American propaganda work, they shun the word itself, because foreign nationalism is poison to proud Iranians and because the taxpayers back home dislike the idea of propaganda.

By teaching school children, through films, lectures and displays, how free institutions work, USIS, a function of the State Department, hopes to keep them from being pulled in the direction of Soviet tyranny.

Documentary films on American life are shown to as many as 60,000 persons a month. A library with 5000 American books and with current magazines is used by 300 persons daily in Tehran.

Daily news bulletins are printed in Persian, English and Russian. In the capital they are distributed by bicycle because the mails are slow.

Program Digests

IN A LAND where private radio receivers are relatively few and where Russian jamming stations are not far away, Voice of America broadcasts have limited effectiveness. USIS amplifies the Voice with a daily publication, "What VOA Said Last Night," which digests past programs and plugs future ones.

This idea was tailored to the situation by Leo S. Disher of Winston-Salem, N. C., embassy press attache and former war correspondent. Another Disher innovation is a regular feature service on American life to any Persian newspaper that asks for it.

There is no Persian Gallup Poll to gauge the effect of the American information program, but it may be significant that the Soviet embassy has put pressure on the Iranian government to curtail it. The Americans are helping to create an atmosphere of free exchange of information, and in this connection it may be noted that, whereas the Iranians have just set up an information service in the United States, they have been denied permission to do so in Moscow.

The March Of Science

A NEW salt substitute perks up taste in foods for people on salt-free diets. The salt taste comes from potassium chloride, whereas ordinary salt is sodium chloride. It adds seasoning to food for people forbidden salt because of heart conditions, high blood pressure and some other diseases. It was developed after two years' research, said E. Fougers & Co., New York.

A person's teeth may be relatively older or younger than the rest of his body, says Dr. Alfred C. Young, professor in the University of Pittsburgh School of Dentistry. "Age in years does not mean dental age any more than it does mental age or physical age in any other part of the body. Premature senility may affect the teeth themselves, the soft tissues and the supporting bony structure particularly. On the other hand, we see many old people with remarkably sound teeth and gums."

ABOUT 250,000 diabetics are employed in jobs in business and industry, and the number is growing each year. Their work record is generally satisfactory as compared with that of people free of the disease, says the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. More diabetics are living longer, and insulin is saving many children who once died at early ages from the disease.

SCIENCE has now worked out a system for using all the milk from dairy cows for human consumption, if necessary. Calves can be raised from birth without feeding them salable whole milk, provided the skim milk is supplemented with cod liver oil or some other source of vitamin A, Henry T. Converse of the Bureau of Dairy Industry reports.

Fateful Week for Fairfax County

By Benjamin Muse

THIS is a fateful year for big, bustling Fairfax County. Decisions to be made by the voters of Fairfax, whose population, when the figures come from the adding machines of the census, will probably be found to equal the combined population of half a dozen neighboring counties, involve $11,480,000 of bond issues and the whole framework of Fairfax County government.

MUSE

The problems to be solved come close to the doorstep of every individual in the county. So it is pretty important for every individual to scratch around and find out what it is all about. That means particularly the large element which "never has anything to do with politics," and the 50 percent of Fairfax County breadwinners who are employed in Washington.

The bond isues are to be voted upon Wednesday. Parents of children in the 16 classrooms on double shift and in the 77 classes which are now housed in churches, lodges, quonset huts and what-have-you will have little trouble making up their minds how to vote on the $10,500,000 bond issue to build schools.

But it will take a great many more votes than that to win, and, as the election was called only two weeks ago, those who believe in schools are having to move fast. . . . They are running into the argument of course, that $10,500,000 is a lot of money.

The Deep Freezes

THEY are also running into such "arguments" as the story about the deep freezes. Some such stuff gets into circulation in nearly every heated preelection contest, and however silly it may be, it can often do considerable damage before intelligent people head it off.

The deep freezes in this case were not those of General Vaughan, but of a respected and devoted public servant, Chairman F. W. Robinson of the Fairfax County School Board. Rather, they are the 15 deep freezes which Fred Robinson enabled the P-TAs to buy for the school cafeterias, in a completely proper manner, at a substantial reduction in price.

Chairman of the school board, however, is not a full-time job, and Robinson makes his living as a member of the firm of Robinson & Hamme, agents for International Harvester's deep freezes. Of course, Robinson sold nothing to the school board or to the county, but it is amazing what a little twisting of the facts can do with a story like that.

The "Old Line" of politicians is assumed to be fighting the school bond issue, and some of them are, but not all. More than one is undecided even at this late date, and State Senator Andrew W. Clark has announced that he will vote for the school bonds. The "antimachine" faction, on the other hand, is regarded as proschool bonds, but some of them are hesitating on the theory that the present setup cannot be trusted to spend so much money wisely. It might be submitted, however, that it takes considerably more wisdom, or ingenuity, to educate children without school buildings.

A Serious Study

IN ANY CASE, the people of Fairfax can vote school bonds and then change the setup if they want to, as petitions are on file, with more than the requisite number of signatures, calling for a referendum election on the adoption of the county form of government.

While the advocates of the change are going forward with a formidable organization to bring in the county manager form, the Board of Supervisors, all but one of whose members are said to be cool toward the idea, has set up a Commission for the Study of County Government. The move was regarded in many quarters as a maneuver to study the county manager plan out of the picture, but the presence of a man of the stature of David Lawrence as chairman of its executive committee is assurance that the commission will take its duties seriously.

No election date has been set, but the commission is working on the assumption that the election will be held along with the regular election in November, and it does not expect to report before September.

Fairfax will also vote Wednesday on a $980,000 bond issue for additions to the courthouse. This project was brought forward in some haste, leading to a suspicion that it was actually for the purpose of defeating the school bond issue. But new office buildings are badly needed by the county, which is currently spending more than $16,000 a year on rented office space, and the plans call for a government building group of which Fairfax can be proud.

Fairfax County can afford both schools and courthouse, or, rather, it cannot afford not to have them; $11,480,000 is a lot of money, but Fairfax is a lot of county.

Point IV

The battle to prevent drastic cuts in foreign aid authorizations was won some weeks ago when the Senate passed a measure providing for expenditures of the same amount as those previously approved by the House. As a result the conference bill makes adequate provision for the ECA by authorizing it to spend up to 2.7 billion dollars next year in addition to the balances carried over from the current fiscal year. Senate attacks on the conference bill have been directed chiefly against the Point IV program for the development of backward areas. The 47-to-27 final vote for this bill should, therefore, be regarded as a test of the Senate's attitude toward the Point IV program rather than the recovery program. So viewed, the vote indicates that the Point IV program has gained a surprising number of adherents in a very short time. For the original Senate version of the Point IV program passed the Senate on May 5 by a margin of just one vote, although it was specifically restricted to technical assistance. The conference-bill version, on the other hand, following the language of the House bill, was replete with what one critic aptly called "high falutin' language" and glittering generalities.

We heartily disapprove the legislative practice of writing flowery speeches and vague promises into legislation, because it gives rise to hopes that may be disappointed. Nevertheless, the conference bill program does not entail any obligation on the part of the Government to make foreign loans for investment purposes or provide guarantees for private investment, as Senator Taft and some of his colleagues claim. Shorn of verbiage, the 35-million-dollar technical aid program aims simply at helping backward peoples to help themselves by showing them how to make better use of their own resources and how to safeguard their health and raise their living standards through improved systems of agriculture and more efficient industrial methods. By such means we can open the way for private investments in backward areas and build up markets for American products. And at the same time we shall be aiding the fight against the poverty, disease and ignorance that are the breeding ground of political unrest and an ever-present threat to world peace.

Milepost In Reform

The Senate appeared to act without logic or consistency last week in passing judgment on President Truman's reorganization plans. In the previous week it had prevented reorganization of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Federal Communications Commission. On Monday it approved almost identical plans for the Federal Trade and Power Commissions. Tuesday it gave right of way to reorganization of the Commerce Department and two other minor plans involving the General Services Administration. The net result is that 16 reorganization plans have gone into effect, 5 have been killed. The Citizens Committee for the Hoover Report estimates that approximately 35 percent of the Hoover Commission recommendations have been put into effect.

In the case of the National Labor Relations Board, there was an obvious reason why the Senate upset the President's proposed reform. Legislators believed that the President was trying to modify the Taft-Hartley Act by a backdoor method. In the case of the FCC and the ICC a majority in the Senate was apparently convinced that the proposed reorganization would lodge too much power in the hands of the chairmen. But why should the Senate fear the concentration of power in the ICC and FCC and be unconcerned about it in the FTC and the FPC? One answer may be that the lobbies interested in maintaining the status quo in the regulation of railroads and broadcasting are more powerful than in the case of the other agencies. But that is not the whole explanation.

Congress has never been immune to temperamental decisions, and we suspect that the bitterness aroused by the previous FEPC debate swelled the total of antireorganization votes. Another factor seems to have been some fear on the part of legislators that they had previously gone too far. After all, this reorganization effort has been bipartisan from the beginning. The Republicans who played a prominent part in defeating the ICC and FCC plans may have heard from their constituents. There are many indications that the people are genuinely interested in the reorganization program insofar as it promises increased economy and efficiency.

On the whole, we think the Administration has done well to get more than a third of the reorganization program accepted. As we pointed out a few days ago, the failure of some of the plans affecting the quasi-judicial commissions are not a vital loss. Approval of such plans for some agencies will put them to the test and enable Congress to decide in the light of experience whether a strong chairman jeopardizes the balance a quasi-judicial body is supposed to have. No program of such magnitude can be carried out without making mistakes. The men responsible for this constructive movement should be encouraged by the substantial degree of success that has attended their efforts. Of course, the campaign must go on.

Must War Come?

Some of the recent French newspaper comment harped upon the calming effect the Schuman plan may have on warmindedness in America. Certainly in the minds of many Americans, perhaps even a majority, the idea of bloody and destructive war with the Soviet Union has now passed from the category of a probability to that of certainty. This conviction seems to permeate a good deal of the current thinking in the military establishment and on Capitol Hill. It appears also to be prevalent among some members of the higher ranks of the occupation forces. The fear that the transition from cold to flaming war may come with some sudden, paralyzing blow at some vital center has resulted in demands for greater preparations for offensive action against Russia.

All this in our opinion represents a rather dangerous state of mind. Politically, there may be, as many insist, no difference between the cold war and a formal war, but materially there is a good deal of difference. The cold war represents the effort of the Russians to achieve their political purpose, which is the downfall of capitalistic society everywhere in the world, without risking military destruction. There is nothing new about it. The downfall of capitalistic society everywhere in the world has been the acknowledged aim of communism since the establishment of the Third International. Thus the conflict with Russia has actually been in progress for more than 30 years. The difference between the strategic situation today and that existing after 1919 is that, because of communism's vast gains in territory and power, the cold war can now be waged with far greater intensity and efficacy. But it does not follow from this that the Kremlin is now ready to complete the revolution by hurling all its military power against its last formidable bourgeois adversary.

No nation ever launched an aggressive war unless its statesmen and military leaders were confident of an easy victory. Such confidence, of course, is often mistaken, and the story of Hitler is merely the most recent of the innumerable historical instances of such mistakes. The question whether the men in the Kremlin have deluded or may delude themselves that they can achieve a quick and easy victory over the United States cannot be answered categorically. But the fact that Stalin and his associates have not yet involved their own military forces (as distinguished from Communist guerilla forces) in any aggressive action against the West suggests that their confidence of victory is by no means complete.

A war of defense, however, would be another matter. There is hardly any doubt that the Soviets will fight if they are attacked, or even if they believe that an attack upon them is imminent. It is in this last possibility that the greatest danger lies. The problem of American statesmanship is how to resist Russian aggressions in the political sphere without fostering the Kremlin's fears of a military attack.

We dare say our statesmen and generals have good reason to believe that, if war comes, the defeat of Russia will be, not perhaps easy, but certain. Even so, it remains the part of statesmanship to prefer a continuation of the cold war to the advent of a shooting war. The present state of the world, as contrasted with that of 1939, is proof enough that military victory and political victory are not necessarily the same thing. Wars ought not to be fought for the sake of victory, but only for the sake of a peace that will be better than the condition precedent to the war, and only when all means of obtaining such a peace without war have been tried and have failed.

Our aim in the conflict with Russia is the elimination of conspiratorial communism as a threat to the stability and rehabilitation of the Western world. It has not yet been shown that this cannot be accomplished without the total militarization of our society, nor is it clear that total war against Russia would not expose us to new evils as great or greater than the Communist evil—perhaps some counterpart of communism with another name and another set of slogans.

The Old Oil

Nothing is too preposterous, we suppose, to parade under the banner of anticommunism at a time when almost every issue is judged by whether or not it helps the Commies. Nonetheless, a lot of John L. Lewis' ruggedly individualistic followers are going to be surprised to learn from the testimony of Joseph T. Berta, president of the Pennsylvania Coal & Coke Co., that cheap oil imports are inviting communism in the United States by throwing coal miners out of work. The oil industry, of course, may be expected to reply promptly that to curtail oil imports would be to encourage communism in Venezuela, Saudi Arabia and Timbuktu. Thus the Commies have you coming or going. And the net effect of these charges, we suspect, will be to encourage dementia among those who have to listen to such drivel.

Stretching The Law

Although the expense of President Truman's "nonpolitical" tour has occasioned a good deal of sarcasm among the Republicans, it is strange that they have not dug further into the circumstances of the "Jefferson Jubilee" in Chicago. This was the three-day extravaganza that greeted the President on his way home from the trip. Ostensibly a celebration to mark the 150th anniversary of Thomas Jefferson's first campaign, the jubilee took Cabinet members to Chicago for a rather feeble mock Cabinet meeting which was televised, and for panel "educational" discussions which passed almost unnoticed. The real purpose of the meeting obviously was to gather a big crowd for the President. By the time he spoke in Chicago, Mr. Truman had discarded all pretense of the "nonpolitical."

The most interesting part of the show was its financing. An organization known as the Chicago Host Committee, "nonpolitical," of course, undertook to raise some $150,000 to pay the expenses. By happy coincidence, the Bureau of Internal Revenue ruled that contributions to the Host Committee from firms that expected to profit from the gathering were tax-deductible as a legitimate business expense. Reportedly taverns and the liquor industry in general were tapped to finance the major part of the show. The Chicago Daily News charged that some $250,000 was raised, that the Chicago head of the Federal Alcohol Tax Unit was a member of the Host Committee and that solicitors of contributions mentioned the Tax Unit in their pleas for funds.

The obvious way to test the objectivity of the tax ruling would be for the Republicans to try the same thing at their forthcoming meetings. That, however, would be merely compounding the impropriety. But we should think that Republicans who are still smarting over the Lincoln Day discrimination—when they were forced to pay 20 percent admissions tax on their $1-per-person box supper, whereas the Democrats got off scot free on their much more lavish $100-a-plate Jefferson-Jackson Day dinner—would concentrate their attack on this new and curious bending of the law. If the Republicans are looking for an issue, they will find a lot more solid meat here than in the McCarthy blather.

Jet Transports

The recent flight of a Canadian jet airliner from Toronto to New York in less than an hour emphasizes the sad position of this country with respect to jet transports. To date there is not a single jet-powered prototype for civil use, and the military has shown no disposition to pioneer jet craft which might be adapted for airline traffic. Meanwhile, both Britain and Canada have experimented extensively with jet transports and have proved their practicability beyond doubt.

All this gives added importance to the Johnson bill now before the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee to authorize the Government to defray the costs of testing new transport aircraft. Unlike a similar bill to provide Government help for developing new private planes—a field which, despite the decline in sales, the manufacturers are capable of financing and marketing—this is a virgin territory. Neither the aircraft manufacturers nor the airlines can bear the expense of developing jet transports, though the airlines undoubtedly would buy models already proved. Yet several good engines are available for prototypes, one more efficient and more powerful than the British counterpart. The combination of jet power with propellers in the new turboprop engine gives promise of being as economical as the conventional piston-type engine, and incomparably faster.

American progress in jet transports is vitally related to national defense, because in wartime the military is certain to fall back on civilian airlines to supply rapid transportation. In any future war conventional planes will be hopelessly slow and outmoded. Yet if there is to be jet transport development, it is apparent that the Government will have to help. Probably it is too late to expect the Johnson bill to be included in this year's appropriations, though it has the approval of the Bureau of the Budget. But certainly Congress ought to pass the authorizing legislation for implementation next year. Provision for continued progress in aircraft development is a good deal more important than most of the pork-barrel projects voted with such abandon.

WATERFALL AT MID-DAY

Frost-blue the waterfall of sky—
Blue, rolling over boulders of wind, with the dark, drowned cry
Of stars, like pebbles, dropped and far under:
Blue waterfall tumbling down the dam of noon,
And where it meets the earth, the foam of snow
Billows and froths, and the curving wind-blown firs
Are the green fish leaping, and the frozen glow
Of winter sun strikes on the water and foam
And is the glint of the wind's spurs.
Through the light snow-foam where it strikes earth I run;
It seethes to my waist and I am burned and cleansed by it,
Burned clean by the sun;
The waterfall catches and turns me, and in a torrent of cold
I hear the roar of God's heart, the terrible thunder
Of generous strength and compassion, pouring down
Over the boulders of wind and the stars deep under,
Over the blind eyes of men and the frozen ground.

"The" Avenue

In many of the articles about the Dupont Circle Underpass reference has been made to "the" avenue, meaning Connecticut ave. Now, of course, such a reference is more or less fitting at this particular time when that special area is under discussion (although two other perhaps more historic avenues also cross at Dupont Circle). And it is natural for the merchants of the region to think of their street as something rather special.

However, most visitors and residents would think that Massachusetts ave. has a better claim to being "the" avenue, for it extends across the District, passing through every sort of representative section of the Southeast, Northeast and Northwest. It is part of Union Station Plaza and goes on to become Embassy Row before it reaches the imposing fabric of Washington Cathedral and so on out into Maryland.

But the real "the" among Washington avenues is now, as always, Pennsylvania ave. It has been so considered for a century and a half, and without the need for quotation marks. It runs from the far Southeast to connect with Georgetown, and it has been the scene of most of the great parades of the past, including that most impressive of all parades (it lasted for days), the reviewing of the troops in 1865. It is the connecting path between Washington's two excuses for being—the Capitol and the White House. Someone, alluding to the differences of opinion between the President and the Congress, once called that section of Pensylvania ave. the longest mile in the world.

"Smuts' Birthday"

It is a bit surprising to find The Washington Post in its May 24 editorial continuing the myth of Field Marshal Smuts as "one of the world's great citizens."

Smuts' contempt for black people has been a matter of public record for more than 30 years. In his Practical Suggestion for a League of Nations, published in December, 1918, he sought to have excluded from the mandate system the "barbarians" of the former German colonies.

The only former mandate in Africa not under trusteeship is Southwest Africa. Smuts, during his last premiership, flaunted the desire of practically the rest of the United Nations in refusing to place this former mandate under trusteeship and in proclaiming his intention of incorporating it into the Union of South Africa as a fifth province.

"Jim Crow" legislation against Indians was enacted during the last premiership of Smuts. When the present Ambassador from India to the United States attempted to have the General Assembly of the United Nations take action against this legislation, Smuts invoked Article 2, paragraph 7, of the Charter to show that the segregation was a domestic question.

Smuts in 1917 called for the unity of Briton and Boer in South Africa in order to preserve it as "a white man's country." In 1928 he proclaimed his willingness "to take anybody to his bosom, Jew or gentile, coming to this country with a determination to make it big."

After having on many other occasions referred to Negroes as "children" and "animals," Smuts delivered his masterpiece in Town Hall, New York, January 9, 1930, when he referred to Negroes as " 'the most patient of all, next to the ass.' " Many Negroes hold Smuts in the same high esteem as that in which Jews held Hitler.

"Nonpolitical" Tour

In order to carry out the principle followed by the radio operators of giving equal time to both sides of every question, would it not now be possible for Congress to appropriate $100,000 to be used by the Republican candidate, when one is selected, for the purpose of making a tour around the country?

In order to be fair to Mr. Truman, it would be necessary for the candidate to announce that the tour would be entirely nonpolitical and that he would confine himself to giving "the facts" to the people of the country.

It would be interesting to observe whether the facts as given by him corresponded exactly to the version of them given by the President.

Prefabs' Strength

I would like to take exception to your news story of May 21 relative to the munitions explosion at South Amboy, N. J., in which the reporter indicates that every window in the home of an 89-year-old woman was broken, adding "but it was a prefabricated affair and so suffered considerably more damage."

Earlier in the same story you say that Eddie Lotkowitz leaped through an unstairs window which had been pulverized. Later you refer to the stained glass windows of St. Mary's Church being shattered from their frames. Your particular reference to the home of the 89-year-old woman suffering considerably more damage because it was prefabricated is not honest or fair reporting unless you also inform your readers of the nature of the prefabrication, total effect of the explosion on conventional type homes within the same area as the prefabricated home and other details.

Dollar Aid And Trade Imbalance

Two basic points, when concisely put, draw a sharp contrast between Dr. Richter's position (letter published May 21) and my own in regard to the general problem of trade imbalance and economic development.

1. According to Dr. Richter, "the natural and human bases" set the primary limiting factor, while I view the quality of human beings and the degree of their Freedom from tradition and convention to be the decisive factor in economic growth.

2. According to Dr. Ritcher, "technical' and material assistance from the wealthier and more advanced parts of the world" can speed up the raising of the living standards in the less advanced areas, while I maintain that technical aid needs to be within the framework of the open market economy and that nonmaterial and institutional assistance needs to be given priority.

To initiate and sustain economic growth, it is necessary to experiment perpetually with improving the quality and productive efficiency of all resources—better mineral extractions and processings, increased yields of plants, upgrading of ultilitarian animals, intensive exploitation of fuel and power sources, and enhanced qualitative expansion of labor, capital and management. It is not sufficient to teach others how to adopt the American improved technique of production, but how to make the continuous process of improving resources their technique.

Such countries as Brazil and India have been receiving both technical and material assistance from wealthier nations over the past 100 years, and yet the overwhelming majority of their peoples are appallingly poor.

In the absence of dynamic tools for dissecting and comprehending the nature of disintegrating or contracting economies of other areas as well as the nature of the American expanding economy, we would seem quite at loss as to the more effective methods of helping other nations.

In the United States, improved quality of resources and increased productive efficiency of their combinations or more correctly their interactions, brings forth surpluses that are distributed in parts in the form of secular lower unit prices and higher wage rates. The cumulative effects of these surpluses over successive periods of production slowly raises on an average of 2 percent per annum, compounded, the living standards of the American people.

In the case such a process of surplus-generation and surplus-distribution does not exist or an exactly opposite process is in operation, then our dollar aids may well be wasted or even have negative results. Mere quantitative expansion made by the use of dollar aids, which brings under utilization unimproved submarginal re-resources tends to depress the living standards via increased average unit-cost prices. Incidentally this kind of expansion in production leads to overproduction, hence the glut of the market as seen in Europe by 1953, when over eight million tons of steel would be unmarketable, even though per capita European steel consumption is less than one third that of the United States.

The dollar is too powerful a weapon to be put into the hands of people without thorough knowledge as to its impact upon economies of other nations. It is not the quantity of dollars but the ways and means for which they are being employed and utilized that determine whether dollar loans and grants are beneficial or harmful. For instance, dollars that feed inflation tend to intensify the economic polarity—the few rich grow richer while the many poor grow poorer—a phenomenon observable not only in most backward areas today but in some Marshall Plan countries.

What distinguishes the American business economy, which is quite distinct from the Americon Government economy, is not any natural resources or material factor, but rather the methods by which American enterprise solves the production and the distribution problems. If we could somehow articulate this complex of methods, which is taken for granted by most Americans, and formulate it schematically for presentation, then we might succeed in teaching other nations how to set in motion similar cumulative forces of secular expansion, and this would also relieve American taxpayers from some of their heavy burdens.

New Optimism In Europe

By Andre Visson

After London

THE LONDON conferences of the Big Three Foreign Ministers and of the 12 Foreign Ministers of the North Atlantic Pact have not produced any sensational results, as was to be expected. But diplomatic observers in Washington have a strong feeling that the London conferences have cleared the way for the formulation of a new, more constructive policy both in Washington and in the western European capitals.

To be sure, conditions for the formulation of a constructive foreign policy are not too favorable in this summer of 1950. There is a regrettable lack of political stability in the three main capitals. In Washington both the Administration and the opposition cannot help thinking in terms of the forthcoming elections. In London there is a growing feeling that new elections may become unfavorable before the end of the year. In Paris the Bidault-Schuman-Queuille coalition of Christian Democrats and middle-of-the-road parties is living on borrowed time, depending for its continuance on the good will of the Socialists who are supporting the government while refusing to share in its responsibilities.

But in spite of all the unfavorable conditions, there is an optimistic feeling that it will be possible to formulate a new, constructive policy. This optimism is justifiable by three important developments.

THE FIRST is the Schuman proposal for pooling the French and German coal and steel industries. This is unquestionably the most important constructive idea to have come out of postwar Europe. And it was certainly deserving of the welcome it received from President Truman, Secretary Acheson and Paul G. Hoffman.

Lately, however, some concern has been expressed about it. Will it not take on the form of a cartel? Will it not lead to the creation of a "third force" in Europe which might try to stand apart from both the United States and Soviet Russia?

This concern appears to have the earmarks of British inspiration. The British Labor government certainly does not like Schuman's proposal. It would compel the British to join the French-German coal and steel authority. But realizing that it would be unwise to start a frontal attack against the Schuman proposal, the British are hoping to undermine it by casting doubts on its ultimate objectives and discrediting it in American public opinion.

Schuman's proposal certainly raises a number of technical problems which will call for new solutions. It is a beginning, not an end. But every western European—and every American familiar with western European problems—knows that there is no chance whatever of organizing western Europe without French-German understanding and cooperation.

British leaders know this too. But they are afraid that a combined French-German industry may oblige them to adjust their economic conceptions and their policies to that of the continent. But the best American observers of British affairs believe that British public opinion, anxious to see the elimination of the age-old French-German enmity, will exert the necessary pressure on the British government to give support to the Schuman proposal.

THE SECOND important development is Britain's agreement to join the European Payment Union, which in the opinion of the ECA and the OEEC has become absolutely indispensable to the maintenance and consolidation of European recovery. Sir Stafford Cripps has for a long time been opposing the European payment plan. And his reluctant acceptance was subject to conditions that may weaken its mechanism and give cause for concern to some continental Europeans.

M. Maurice Freres of the Belgian National Bank, for instance, is not at all enthusiastic about the European Payments Union as it will look after the British amendments. It may indeed impose upon Belgium, a creditor nation, the burden of a credit amounting to 30 billion Belgian francs ($600 million). But as unsatisfactory as the Payments Union may now look, it is still better than nothing. And the combination of the Schuman proposal and the Payments Union certainly justifies the optimism with which Paul G. Hoffman regards western Europe's economic future.

The third and most important development is the knowledge that it will soon be possible to organize the defense of western Europe in such a way as to relieve its feeling that occupation by the Red army is an inescapable doom. The latest scientific developments combined with the now possible shift from strategic to tactical aviation will soon modify not only the structure of the North Atlantic defense, but will change the entire political picture.

But all this will be true only if western Europeans realize that American protection alone cannot bring them security. They will have to make their contribution. And as encouraged as they may be by the good news, they should, above all, avoid the delusion of a new Maginot Line. Real security can be achieved only by a combination of continued technical improvement and continued high morale.

Matter of Fact

Dampers on President's Smile

By Stewart Alsop

HE SMILES all the time. If you attend one of the President's weekly press conferences, that is likely to be the first thing you notice about this natty, sharp-faced, ruddy-complexioned man who carries such an appalling load of responsibility. With some people it requires a conscious effort to smile. With President Truman it apparently requires a conscious effort not to smile.

Most of the questions are pretty trivial, and when they are being asked or answered, the President's grin never for a moment leaves his face. Then there is a serious question—about defense, perhaps, or Trygve Lie's peace mission—and one can almost sense Truman saying to himself, "This is serious. I must look solemn," as the grin is slowly erased.

The smile is perhaps in part a nervous reaction. Even while he is smiling, you notice, if you are near enough, that the President is apt to open and shut his left hand in a tense, repeated motion. Yet the constant smile does certainly express something real in the man, whether it is mere cockiness, or an irrational euphoria, or a healthy confidence, or native optimism.

As you look at him, it is hard to believe that this smiling man, with his neat, four-pointed silk handkerchief in his breast pocket and his cheerful face, so astonishingly like the faces of so many Americans, is what he is. For here is a man who carries as heavy a load of responsibility as any President has ever carried. During no other Presidency, after all, has an aggressive and ruthless potential enemy been capable of inflicting mortal wounds on the United States itself.

Some Uncheerful Facts

YET HARRY TRUMAN smiles on. What lies behind the smile? A man of courage and stature, or an amiable politician, catapulted by a series of incredible accidents into the Presidency? By the end of this year, it should be possible to answer this question with some assurance.

The reason is simple. President Truman is now confronted with a hard, clear-cut choice. The National Security Council is even now wrestling with this choice, but it is Truman who must take the final responsibility for any decision. The choice is between a real effort to place the Atlantic community as a whole in a posture of defense, or half-measures and business as usual.

Here are some of the uncheerful facts of which the smiling President must be aware. The best estimates are that sometime between 1952 and 1954, the Soviet Union should be capable of a surprise atomic strike which would knock out between 25 and 40 percent of the American war potential. Moreover, unless the present scale of the Atlantic Pact defense effort is decisively augmented, the Red army will at the same time be capable of overrunning western Europe and neutralizing Britain.

The Soviet Union is far less vulnerable to atomic bombing than the United States. The men in the Kremlin believe that war is sooner or later inevitable. Under the circumstances outlined above, the Soviets could hope to gain their ends by the mere threat of war, or, failing that, to win a war if war came.

Communications Threat

THE jaunty President must be aware of these facts. He must further be aware that his best experts do not believe that this situation need ever arise. For these experts believe that a determined effort will make it possible to deny western Europe to the Red army by the time the Soviets have a decisive atomic stockpile.

Moreover, the experts believe that in this case the Soviet leaders would not risk war, simply because they would know they could not win it. If Soviet communications could be cut while the Red army was still fighting, the offensive capabilities of the Red army could be quite quickly undermined.

Yet President Truman has also undoubtedly been studying the estimates of the experts on the scope of the effort required to make the defense of western Europe a real thing instead of the sham it now is. The cost to this country alone—and this assumes a major effort by the Europeans—would probably run to between two and a half and three billion dollars over a period of several years. At the same time, the military strength of the United States would have to be increased decisively.

This would mean continued high taxes, continued deficits, battles with congressional isolationists, the abandonment of costly domestic projects, even possible repudiation by Congress or at the polls. It is an old, familiar choice, which must be often in the mind of the President as he smiles so cheerfully. Others can advise. But only he can make the choice. So we should soon know what lies behind the smile.

Our Political Economy

Simple Arithmetic on the Hill

By Ysabel and Robert Rennie

THE House has passed and sent to the Senate the omnibus appropriation bill for 1951. It is now possible to assess the two reforms introduced this session: the performance budget, which shows Congress the functions for which money is asked, and the single - package appropriation, which ties up a dozen appropriation bills into one.

The experiment seems to have caused some confusion. Irritated and confused by the length of the bill (over 400 pages), Representative John Taber said, "It's a lemon," and Majority Leader John McCormack doubted if it would ever be tried again.

The performance budget also performed in unexpected ways. After a month of debate, during which the House added 450 million dollars to the appropriation bill, the legislators were suddenly seized with remorse. Led by Representatives Taber and Jensen, they took a meat-ax and chopped a billion dollars from the civilian functions of Government.

The approach was as simple as it was indiscriminate. Ten percent was cut from the President's budget estimates for civilian personnel, travel allowances, transportation, communications, rents, utilities, printing, contractual services, supplies, materials and equipment. Military civilian personnel was cut 2 percent and military travel 5 percent. Lands and structures were cut 5 percent.

Representative Jensen then added his amendment to prohibit the filling of more than 10 percent of all Government vacancies during the coming fiscal year.

The method was a little like a man who has to reduce his spending by 10 percent, and chooses to do so by cutting down 10 percent on the baby's milk and 10 percent on his liquor expenditures. It was, to say the least, unselective.

Representative Taber expected a 10 percent cut in payroll to reduce Federal workers by that amount. This is simple arithmetic, but wrong. The average Federal worker has two months' accumulated leave, and would receive a 30-day notice. This means it would cost three months' pay to fire a man.

The Taber amendment would probably reduce Federal employment by at least 250,000 workers, rather than the 200,000 originally estimated. Perhaps the Government could stand the reduction. But under the Taber approach, the most efficient agencies would suffer serious demoralization, while those with padded payrolls would scarcely feel the cut at all.

More important, there is no attempt to discriminate intelligently among Government functions. It is a desperate and frustrated approach to the problem of big government.

Question of Value

WE SHOULD not underestimate the dilemma facing Congress. It is our legislators' job to spend 40 billion dollars a year. What they and the public want to know is whether the government we get for 40 billions is worth what we give up in taxes.

But how much is a Government dollar worth? A car, we know, is worth $1800 if the public will buy it for that. But how can we judge the value of the Foreign Service or the Marshall Plan?

There is only Congress to judge and frequently there is not any basis for intelligent appraisal. Logrolling, pressure groups, even spite, enter into the calculations of our legislators and must be given their weight.

Perhaps the most serious obstacle is the fact that each Congress inherits enormous and growing commitments from the past: interest on the national debt, veterans' pensions and allowances, foreign aid commitments, national defense.

Out of the total of some 28 billion dollars appropriated in this omnibus bill, three-quarters was earmarked for veterans and defense. This leaves little scope for discretion.

It would be ideal if our legislators could sit like Solomon in judgment, weighing the value of one function against another, and the cost of government against the satisfactions the American people must forego to pay for it.

Forgotten Man

A FEW YEARS ago the New Yorker came up with an ingenious solution: at income tax time, let each taxpayer send his money to the agency he liked best. A drought-parched Western rancher, for example, might mail his taxes to the Bureau of Reclamation. A mail-order house would no doubt express its gratitude to the Postoffice Department.

The proposal would constitute a kind of running Gallup Poll on the United States Government. On second thought, however, the New Yorker was forced to abandon its plan as unrealistic. Who would ever pay anything toward supporting the Collector of Internal Revenue?

Different Cycles Govern Sunspots

THOSE who have had difficulty in making the sunspot cycle correspond with events on earth which they believe are cyclic in nature may find the key to their problems in an announcement by Dr. Seth B. Nicholson of the Mount Wilson and Palomar observatories.

He says there are two sunspot cycles, one for the northern and one for the southern hemisphere of the sun, and they are out of step. The maximum for the southern hemisphere came in 1947 and for the northern in 1949. He reports in the Publications of the Astronomical Society of the Pacific.

JOHN HERSEY writes "A Yearling Family" in Redbook with the same detailed reportorial style with which he followed the fate of each person in "Hiroshima," first published in the New Yorker. Now Hersey has told the story of a Hungarian DP family's first year in this country. In only eight pages, he covers an astonishing amount of ground.

He introduces us to the Marjai-Szabos on the boat coming over, flashes back briefly to their separation during the war and incredible reunion afterward, their appeal to a cousin in Bridgeport and final departure two years later. He then takes them through a succession of disappointments and setbacks, punctuated with lucky breaks and achievements. The family met alternately with "a general indifference," and "sudden thrusts of overwhelming generosity and kindliness." Both as a human document and as an A-1 piece of reporting, "A Yearling Family" shouldn't be missed.

In the same issue, the children will enjoy Dr. Seuss' story-poem, "Gustav, the Goldfish."

McCALL'S contains the second installment of the Ernie Pyle story, which includes Ernie's gradual rise to fame against the tragic background of his wife's terrible mental illness, the strain of which finally led to a rift between them. In the same issue, Selma Robinson writes on second marriages. The second chance need not be second best, Mrs. Robinson concludes.

McCall's reports by mail on the results of the competition it held in the March issue, half of which was run off with the usual pretty girl cover, and half with a new-looking cake cover. Home subscribers, as well as this column, favored the girl. The cake had a slight edge on the newsstands, say the editors.

JOHN BARTLOW MARTIN, the country's foremost crime reporter, interviews a retired burglar for his advice to women, also in McCall's. In the Saturday Evening Post, Martin writes "The Case History of a Paroled Convict." It raises the hair on end about chances for rehabilitation. Here is another knockout piece of reporting by one of the top freelancers in the field. A more pedestrian job, but good of its kind, is Virginia Kellogg's appalling tale in Collier's of conditions in State penitentiaries for women. Miss Kellogg got her material by posing as an inmate.

AND STILL on the subject of crime is U. S. News' predictions of what the Senate crime investigators will find: gambling racket syndicates "just about blanket the Nation, except in thinly populated areas," and they are still expanding. Hundreds of millions of dollars a year go to pay off politicians and police. Most powerful syndicates operate from New York and Chicago, with a third lesser known in Cleveland. There are dozens of smaller ones. So powerful is the grip of racketeers on municipal governments that only Federal action can pry it loose. But there is plenty of evidence the syndicates operate across State lines, says U. S. News, thus providing solid legal foundation for any proposed Federal action.

"The way was open to get Japan to surrender at least six months before VJ-Day," asserts the former deputy director of the Office of Naval Intelligence. Zacharias argued against the Yalta decision to let Stalin have the Kuriles in exchange for a declaration of war against Japan. He felt we didn't need the Russians and we did need the Kuriles.

After he was defeated on this question, Zacharias went on to hatch out a series of plans designed to bring about a surrender, and one of which would have landed Douglas Fairbanks, jr., on the coast of Japan in a submarine. All were stifled by the "Washington bureaucracy" which, according to Zacharias, failed to grasp the possibilities of psychological warfare.

The President Calls Up a Ghost

By Drew Pearson

WISCONSINITES are still talking about the convenient manner in which the cornerstone of Filene House was ripped out during President Truman's visit to Madison, so he could lay it again and dedicate the new building.

Named in honor of Edward Filene, founder of the credit union movement, the building will be national headquarters for the Credit Union Association.

Before the ceremonies, the President walked through the building and chatted about Filene with John Eidam, credit union president. Truman remarked that he knew Filene well.

"He used to call on me when I was Senator," said the President, adding that he also called when he was Vice President and when he was President.

Wisconsinites think this must have taken supernatural powers, for Filene died 13 years ago—six years before Truman was elected Vice President.

Capital News Capsules

Egyptian Love—American relations with Egypt have hit a new low as a result of the marriage in San Francisco of Egyptian Princess Fatieh. As soon as King Farouk heard the news, he summoned Ambassador Caffery and told him he held the United States responsible for this insult to his royal honor. If the State Department had forced the princess to leave as he requested one year ago, said the King, all this wouldn't have happened. Caffery tried to explain, but Farouk brushed him aside and stalked out of the room.

Restless Russian Border—Gen. James Van Fleet, the United States military commander returning from Greece, has finished a secret inspection of the Iranian army. Here are the highlights of his alarming report: The Iranian army is so fed up with the corruption of its high officers that it's on the verge of revolt. The Iranian chief of staff admitted that his army should not be counted on in case of trouble with Russia. Meanwhile, Russia seems determined to get the Iranian oil fields either by internal revolt or external conquest.

Secret GOP Survey

THE REPUBLICAN NATIONAL COMMITTEE has just finished a highly confidential survey of its chances to capture the Senate next November. The survey is not too encouraging. It shows a sure net gain of one Senate seat for the Republicans, though if a strong trend develops for either party, the Republicans could win seven new seats, or lose that many.

The report was prepared by GOP scouts who have been roving the grass roots. Here are the highlights of what they found:

Pennsylvania—Colorful, progressive GOP Gov. Jim Duff is counted a sure winner over Senate Majority Whip Francis Myers, Democrat.

Connecticut—The GOP will center its fire on the old advertising team of Gov. Chet Bowles and Senator Bill Benton, and thus hope also to rub out Senator Brien McMahon, able chairman of the Atomic Energy Committee. The Republicans aren't too confident, however. The Democrats have a strong team.

Illinois—The Republicans are ready to shell out a lot of dough in a major drive to beat Senate Majority Leader Scott Lucas. The scouts think his opponent, former Representative Everett Dirksen, has the edge.

Idaho—GOP scouts count on beating Glen Taylor, Henry Wallace's old running mate, but recently Taylor has been picking up. The GOP committee expects to win here.

Colorado—Witty Senator Eugene Millikin, a Republican, is in bad shape. The GOP organization has fallen apart and Millikin has not devoted enough time to mending fences.

Iowa—Senator Bourke Hickenlooper, Joe McCarthy's errant boy on the Tydings Committee, is unpopular with Republican moderates who helped elect Democratic Senator Guy Gillette in 1948. He is branded as pro-utility and anti-rural electrification.

Indiana—Juke box tycoon Senator Homer Capehart probably will meet the live-wire former Assistant Attorney General Alex Campbell, the man who convicted Alger Hiss, Axis Sally and Parnell Thomas. Capehart is regarded as a certain loser.

Wisconsin—The incumbent Republican Senator, jovial Alexander Wiley, is in for a tough fight.

Ohio—Taft, who is "Mr. Republican" to most Americans, will get tremendous support from the entire party and is expected to win.

Missouri—The Republicans will shoot at Harry Truman by reopening the Kansas City scandals. The defeat of Republican Senator Forrest Donnell was considered certain until the Binaggio-Gargotta murders. Now it isn't.

Nevada—A 30-year alliance between Old Guard Republicans and the Democratic machine was finally broken by the new GOP State chairman, Harold Stocker. Before this shake-up, both party organizations helped elect querulous, elderly Pat McCarran, Democrat. Anything can happen this time.

California—Anything can happen here also, the scouts report, in an election where a variety of local issues and such strong personalities as Gov. Earl Warren and Jimmy Roosevelt are involved.

The GOP survey lists the following States as sure Republican: New Hampshire, Vermont, Kansas, the Dakotas, Oregon and Pennsylvania. Certain to go Democratic are: New York, Maryland, Washington, Utah and the Deep South.

On the fence, but leaning Republican, are: Connecticut, Illinois, Idaho, Ohio and Missouri. Leaning Democratic are Indiana, Iowa, Wisconsin, Colorado, Nevada and California.

The Gallup Poll

Voters Look Kindlier on Reich

By George Gallup
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

EVIDENCE from public opinion surveys indicates that current diplomatic moves in Europe are in substantial accord with the thinking of the average American voter.

This applies not only to far-reaching steps taken at the London conference to unify the Atlantic Pact powers, but also to steps in the direction of bringing Western Germany into a closer bond with the West.

Recent surveys by the Institute show:

1. Among voters who have followed the German situation, the weight of sentiment is in favor of inviting Western Germany to become a member of the Atlantic Pact.

2. There also is overwhelming sentiment—2 to 1—in favor of allowing the Western Germans to build up their business and industries to pre-war level.

3. The average voter draws the line, however, at permitting the West Germans to build up their armed forces to any substantial level.

A series of questions was used concerning Germany. The first was designed to weed out voters with practically no information about the situation. It asked what countries are now occupying Germany.

Eighteen percent of the adults questioned were unable to name any of the occupying powers, while the remaining 82 percent named one or more correctly—Russia, United States, Britain and France.

The next question consisted of three parts. It asked whether we should let Western Germany do any of the following things:

Rebuild Industries?
Should	50%
Should not	26
No opinion	6
	82%
Uninformed on German situation	18
	100%

Rebuild Army?
Should	34%
Should not	41
No opinion	7
	82%

Join Atlantic Pact?
Should	44%
Should not	26
No opinion	12

Today's views toward Germany contrast sharply with the situation following Nazi surrender in 1945.

During the early period of the occupation, the majority of American voters questioned in Institute surveys showed hostile attitudes toward Germany and believed that we were not being "tough" enough in handling the Germans.

Today, Western Germany is looked upon almost as an ally by the general public, judging from today's survey.

This change in attitude was already becoming apparent a year ago. When the institute asked voters last autumn whether they thought Western Germany would side with us or against us in the event of another war, the weight of opinion was that the Germans would be on our side.

A Stiff Shock to Those Indifferent to Church-State Tensions

By Rabbi Morris S. Lazaron

CHURCH AND STATE IN THE UNITED STATES. By Anson Phelps Stokes. Harpers. 3 vols. $25.

WHEN THE voice of religion speaks modestly and humbly in the spirit of Moses and Jesus, it "comes up like thunder" out of the wasteland of our pretensions, our shams, our presumptions, our hypocrisies and our dogmatisms.

RABBI LAZARON

A distinguished company of Protestant, Catholic and Jewish laymen and ministers gathered at the Yale Club the other afternoon at the invitation of Harper & Brothers to honor Anson Phelps Stokes on the publication day of his monumental work, "Church and State in the United States." The study is in three volumes of approximately 1000 pages each. But no one should be frightened by its size, for it is fascinating and important reading.

To attempt a summary would be an injustice to the author. Collecting and arranging the material took 13 years, he told me. It is a monument to painstaking and exhaustive research and industry. This reviewer can only voice inadequately an expression of appreciation, more profound because of the complex and explosive issues presently and widely discussed.

"The author believes that a wise solution of the problems of church-state adjustment cannot be reached without a knowledge of the historic background." But knowledge must lead to action, he insists again and again. "The reconciliation of eccleciastical authoritarianism and political democracy still involves some serious difficulties," is Canon Stokes' masterpiece of understatement, considering the dynamite of his facts. "I have tried to treat it in the spirit of truth-seeking and tolerance." He has.

This encyclopedic work will help dispel the ignorance which beclouds the issues by making crystal clear the intent and direction of American thinking, feeling and legal precedent; its objectivity offers example of how such matters should be discussed; it may prevent easy acceptance of interpretations slanted to support particular points of view.

Despite the calm tenor of its presentation, the impact of the book will be a powerful shock to those who, while cognizant of the tensions in church-state relations, have been tempted to look upon these tensions with a more or less condescending patience. It should give pause to the compromisers of today whose faith in democracy may be failing and whose weakness may permit the course of American life to be diverted to the abandoned trails of yesteryear.

Memories of Abuse

THE GENERAL thesis of "Church and State in the United States" might be put as follows: History proves that any church-state tie-up makes for tyranny and that "separation" makes for freedom. American history proves that the Founding Fathers believed with their whole hearts in religious freedom. They were just as unreservedly committed to "separation" as established in the law, the thinking and convictions of our people since colonial times.

Our colonial forebears brought with them memories of controversy, abuse of power and oppression, and from England had learned the lesson that no one form would command the allegiance of all the people. They provided for what Jefferson called the "wall of separation" because of the many different religious bodies represented in colonial America.

The long battle for disestablishment and equality of all religions before the law presented many difficulties because of the ties with the mother country. Particularly interesting are the incidents in Maryland (1783), where the diocese adopted a declaration declaring its independence of any foreign authority ecclesiastical or civil; in Virginia and in Philadelphia (1784), where for the first time laity and clergy sat officially in the council of the church and declared that "the Episcopal Church in these states is and ought to be independent of all foreign authority ecclesiastical or civil."

A similar ferment was taking place in the Roman Catholic Church, although it did not go so far. The address of Bishop John England of Charleston, S. C., in the House of Representatives (1826), refers to "the plain distinction between spiritual authority and the right to interfere in the regulation of human government or civil concerns. You have in your Constitution wisely kept them distinct and separate. It will be wisdom and prudence and safety to continue the separation."

Canon Stokes also points out "the recognition, all too frequently ignored, of the major influence of Freemasonry in the establishment of the idea of religious freedom and human brotherhood in colonial times." Every Protestant denomination—and, of course, they were in the vast majority then as now—and the few Jewish congregations hewed to the line of "separation" and each made its contribution out of its own genius to this new experiment in church-state relations.

The Sinners 'Inside'

THERE IS much to be said for the irenic approach to religious controversy. More light and less heat are necessary. But there are times when the irenic becomes the bitterly ironic; when advantage is taken of the desire for cooperation. All would be well in our American scene if all the saints were "inside" church and synagogue and all the sinners "outside." But there are many sinners "inside" and many saints unfortunately "outside." Such a situation makes any linking of religion and politics fatal.

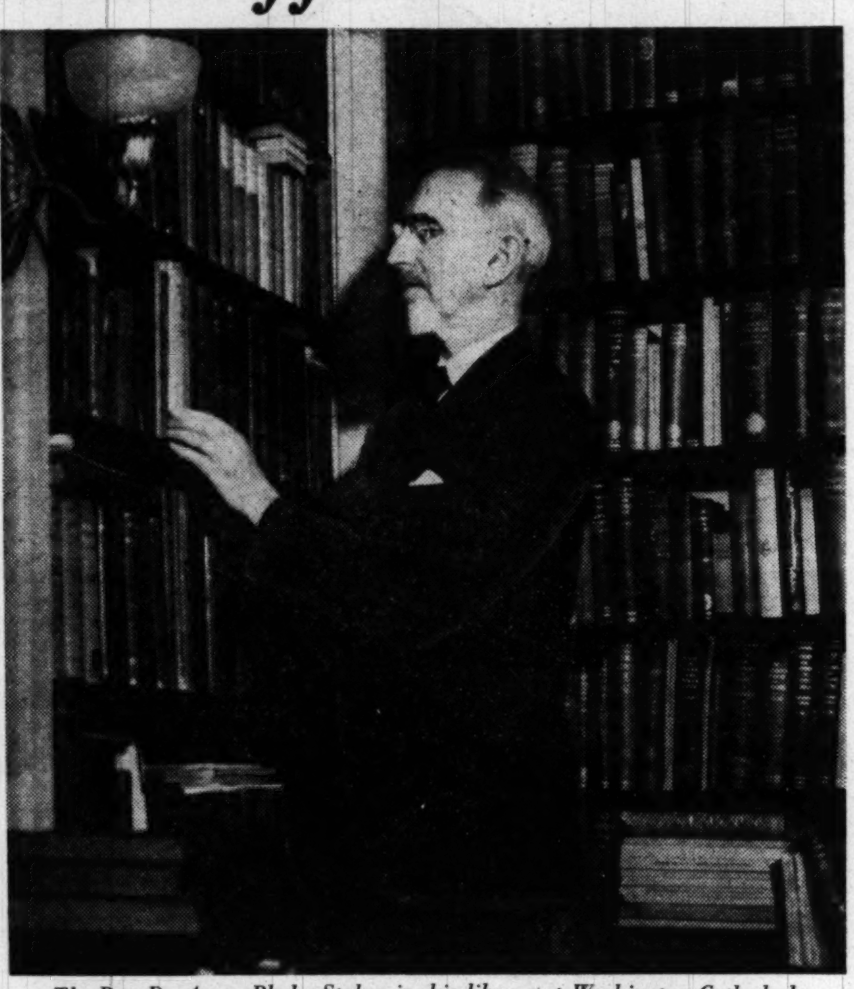
The crux of the matter seems to be that the church sometimes claims sovereignty in areas which the state claims as its own. Where does the authority of the state end and where does the authority of the church begin? Hilaire Belloc stated the issue clearly some years ago in his "The Contrast"—so far as the Roman Catholic Church is concerned—when he referred to "the necessary conflict between civil state and Catholic Church where the two are not identified. The Catholic Church is in root principle at issue with the civic definition both of freedom and authority." (Page 160).

Canon Stokes points out that the Roman Catholic Church's claim "that it is the sole authorized depository of religious truth and that consequently it has the right to be accorded special treatment in its attitude toward some matters connected with faith and morals," is not disputed by the state. But when the claim flows over into areas of conduct affecting all the citizens of the country, trouble begins. "The attitude of some thoughtful, non-Catholic Americans toward the compatibility of Roman Catholic theory and democracy" can hardly be appreciated without understanding the Syllabus of Errors of Pius IX (1864) and the Vatican Decree (1870).

In our American democracy "there is a broad distribution of powers, whereas in the Roman Catholic Church final authority is in the hands of a pope, elected by cardinals—mostly Italian—in whose choice the rank and file of people have no say . . . no one should quarrel with those who wish this form of government in the field of religion, but when the church claims through the pope final authority also in 'morals' in which the state is also vitally concerned, there is a basis for possible difficulty because the word may be extended to include the broad field of social ethics with which the modern state is directly concerned . . . This fact is not mentioned in criticism . . . but merely that we may have a realistic view of the situation as it may affect church-state complications."

The Roman Catholic Church does not approve of the phrase, "separation of church and state," unless its meaning is limited by definition; "though the church has adjusted itself to it as a modus vivendi in this country . . . it theoretically cannot approve of it as an ideal." Canon Stokes describes the traditional American attitude as "friendly cooperation" or "cooperative separation." But he notes that there is a difference between religious freedom supported because it is expedient and religious freedom supported on principle.

The Old World mind is mature, sophisticated, profound, but it is often weary and disillusioned. Its weariness leads it often to an irrational, romantic mysticism, a longing for inner serenity and peace, an abandonment of independence and an uncritical acceptance of authority. The disillusionment and sophistication often lead it to the realism of Machiavelli or to casuistic, pilpulistic or inquisitorial methods from which the open, truth-seeking, straightforward, confident, independent religious mind of the Anglo-Saxon world recoils as somewhat less than honest or kind.



The Rev. Dr. Anson Phelps Stokes, in his library at Washington Cathedral, where he had been canon for 15 years when he retired in 1939

The Old World mind can teach us profundity, an appreciation of the complexity of life, and it holds up the dream of unity under authority; we can teach the Old World frankness, directness and the harmony that are won through voluntary association for ends larger than parochial, particularistic or nationalistic. Above all, it is the duty of all Americans to see to it that by restraint in speech and conduct the shameful abuses of continental clericalism and anticlericalism are not introduced into American life.

Parochial School Issue

MANY irritations and pressures result from the overlapping and often conflicting claims of church and state sovereignties. These volumes are a mine of inspiring and sobering information covering the entire field—education, marriage, birth control, Vatican representation, foreign affairs and the tendency of some religious groups to what the author calls "voluntary isolation."

Canon Stokes' persistent objectivity is manifest particularly in his discussion of the warmly debated state support for parochial schools issue. He quotes Catholic authorities in favor of such support but points out, "there are devout Roman Catholics who believe that parochial schools should continue to be supported entirely by the churches without attempts to secure financial grants from the public treasury."

He believes the free public schools are bulwarks of democracy. "Our citizens live too close to Quebec on the north and Mexico on the south to wish to see in this country either the dividing of the public school funds or the attempt by the Roman Catholic Church or any other church to control education for its own ends. It would be disastrous to American freedom, democracy and culture." (Vol. 2. Page 658).

In his discussion of marriage, Canon Stokes points out, "The law of the Roman Catholic Church on this matter is specific: The church claims full, independent and exclusive power over the marriage of all baptized persons, Catholics, heretics, schismatics . . . That power is exclusive. It includes the legislative, judicial and coercive power . . ." The inference, of course, is that if marriage by a justice of the peace is a valid marriage under the law of the state but a mortal sin and invalid for a Catholic, the question of sovereignty is a real issue not only for the persons involved but for the state whose law is implicitly challenged.

Similar situations arise in the presentations of censorship and birth control. The basic question is: Should a sectarian position be forced upon the Nation? The fear of ideas is un-American. Stokes' story of United States representation at the Vatican should go far to enlighten non-Catholics as to the historic background of the problem and it should indicate to our Catholic fellow citizens the inadvisability of pushing the issue from the point of view of good-neighborly relations with their non-Catholic fellow Americans.

Pressures in Washington to influence our national policy come under consideration. "Religious freedoms as related to Protestant churches working in Latin America have recently been raised in a serious way by action of the Catholic hierarchy." Of the Irish question, it is indicated "how definitely and wholeheartedly the hierarchy and priesthood of Irish extraction . . . gave themselves to the cause of Irish freedom . . . It is quite possible that Protestant ministers, if conditions in Ireland had been reversed, might have done the same thing . . . But that is not the point here. It is that the Roman Catholic Church was to a large extent 'in politics' over the Irish issue in much the same way as the Methodist Church was 'in politics' a few years later over prohibition." Perhaps his suggestion that the question is not so live now is somewhat overoptimistic in view of recent demonstrations on the occasion of a visit here of a distinguished gentleman from Northern Ireland.

A similar restrained treatment of the Spanish situation: "The situation was complicated as far as American church-state relations were concerned because there was a definite attempt on the part of influential Catholic groups to get our country to support Franco; and on the part of liberal Protestants who thought Nazi-Fascism an even greater world danger than liberalism tinged with communism, to gain increased support for the Liberal government in spite of some of its extreme tendencies." The author points out that each time any church involved itself in politics, it was criticized by its political opponents, and the spiritual mission of that particular church was weakened.

The Palestine Parallel

"POLITICAL Zionism as an American Issue" receives the same understanding and restrained treatment. "The question of Palestine has assumed in the last two decades a controversial status in our political life in many ways similar to that of Ireland . . . In both cases Washington has reverberated with the demands of Americans of a religious group regarding the government of a foreign country which they consider to be in one way or another their 'homeland.' In both cases the issue has dragged Great Britain into American politics."

Although he refers to differences of opinion among Jews on political Zionism and Jewish nationalism, he states that it is "probably fair to say that at least 75 percent of American Jews have favored political Zionism in some form." This last is to some extent true, although there is an increasing tendency to reject the Jewish nationalist thesis that all Jews everywhere must be emotionally and psychologically tied to the state of Israel.

Men in public life everywhere, but particularly in Washington, could reveal much about the silent pressures of all religious, economic, labor and other groups. To speak their mind might jeopardize their political future. But the people are fed up with smoke-screens and double talk. Our country and its people have always appreciated and rewarded moral courage. Evil thrives in darkness. He mistakes the temper of the Nation who hesitates to speak the simple truth. Pressures of particular groups, whether directed to some foreign goal or to some advantage for themselves within the Nation, are intolerable today in our democracy. Publicity and moral courage are the best weapons against them.

Canon Stokes raises an issue in regard to Roman Catholics but in which practically all groups are in some measure guilty. "A tendency has grown among the leaders of the Church to keep the Catholic population apart in many aspects of life . . . One of voluntary isolation rather than forced segregation." Certainly the problem is a real one for American Jews who are constantly faced with the aggressive propaganda of Jewish nationalism in their religious schools and in their philanthropic and community organizations, which the Zionists, aided by the inactivity or weakness of sympathetic non-Zionist Jews, desire to dominate and to which they would give an Israeli orientation.

Attempts at Adjustment

THE AUTHOR believes that the best long-term solution of all the above problems and areas of tension between church and state in the United States lies in the voluntary adjustment of any Protestant, Catholic or Jewish group concerned, to the broad tradition of "cooperative separation." He considers the question of "auxiliary services," i.e., bus transportation, free textbooks, health services, etc., as an example of attempts at adjustment. The problem is a complicated one because there is a distinction between health services on the one hand and textbooks and transportation on the other.

His brilliant review of the judicial decisions in the Everson case and other cases deserves special reading. "Supporters of religious freedom are divided as to the best future course. Some believe in pursuing the issue further before the courts; others, recognizing that it (the Everson case) was a borderline case, believe in accepting the court's decision at least for the present and devoting their attention to the more serious church-state issue. Logic favors the former position; expediency the latter." Since the movement for state permissive legislation seems to be growing, the fear grows also that the wall may be breached by such devices and the expedient attitude may be an unworthy compromise.

There is also the danger that public attention may be diverted from the main issue, which is the preservation of the "wall of separation." Canon Stokes suggests "on the part of the churches, as distinct from the state, . . . the giving up of anything approaching partisan political activity." There is an old rabbinic maxim which might be quoted in this connection: "Make a fence for the teaching." In other words, be sure the main intent and meaning of the American tradition of separation of church and state is impregnably established by setting round it regulations like lines of trenches to defend it. This becomes all the more important when we consider the fate of the Barden bill.

Roman Catholics should never forget that despite persecution by the ignorant and the biased, intelligent and liberal Protestants rose again and again to their defense. It was a Protestant lawyer and a Protestant judge who protected the sancity of the confessional. Jews should never forget the support which Protestant and Catholic have given in securing and maintaining for them equality of rights and status. Protestants should never impose on their majority status.

"The tendency of the Roman Catholic Church when a religious minority in any country, as it is today in America, had been to demand religious freedom, but when in large majority to deny it or to attempt to secure hampering restrictions." (Volume 3, Page 465). The same tendency is manifest in Israel today. (Volume 2, Page 486).

"Our forefathers and fathers have laid firm constitutional foundations in the matter of religious freedom and separation of church and state in the United States. But it is one thing to secure 'rights,' a very different thing to see that they are preserved inviolate. This is where an alert public opinion is always necessary. 'Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty.' "

One of the most interesting suggestions of a practical nature which the author makes to safeguard "separation" and preserve balance is an amendment to the Constitution. Volume 3, Page 681). "Unless the Supreme Court is unanimous or nearly so in its future decisions in holding that church-state separation can be adequately secured under existing constitutional provisions, amendments may be necessary to resist both the demands of Roman Catholics for financial assistance for parochial schools and the demands of Protestants (and some Catholics) for religious instruction in public schools." Several joint resolutions looking toward these ends have been introduced in Congress.

Unfortunate Allianecs

THERE is no fear of an anticlerical movement in this country unless it be caused by those who can prevent it. We must learn to recognize the reactionary economic and political forces in the world with which organized religion unfortunately too often has been allied. We must understand the true mission of religion. The struggle against these forces is not anticlericalism nor is it antireligion. It is rather voiced in the deeply moving musical drama of Menotti now playing in New York, "The Consul," in relation to political authoritarianism. The weary, driven and put-upon people in one of the shaking moments of the play sing out their longing: "Give us back our land! Give us freedom!"

There is enough substance in the religion of Moses and Jesus as interpreted by Christians and Jews to need no underpinning by the state. Where church and synagogue seek to censor, control, distort or pervert the simple convictions dominant in the American tradition and to which the vast majority of Americans of all creeds yield unreserved loyalty, they cease to be the voice of religion and pass over into politics. They should be met on that ground. There is a prayer in the liturgy of the synagogue which is of universal significance, that the "dominion of arrogance" shall vanish from the earth.

The creeds and denominations, in demanding freedom for themselves, have two obligations: the obligation not to abuse that freedom by attempts to secure special privilege or treatment or status for themselves, and the obligation to relinquish any demand that is inconsistent with those universals which underpin all the religions. Of course, we have a long way to go. And, basically, what I am talking about is an attitude of humility. Such an attitude will mellow our controversies, chasten and refine our own particular faith and may perhaps help to check the demands of the more zealous.

Canon Stokes' suggestion that his work be condensed into a one-volume popular edition should be undertaken at once. Such a volume widely distributed might well quench some of the fires that are smouldering dangerously under the surface of our national life. He himself should undertake this important task.

Home Rule Doesn't Lack Backers

By Harry N. Stull

THE attempt to show that the majority of organizations making up the Federation of Citizens Associations are opposed to home rule, fails when the full facts are presented.

STULL

The Kefauver home rule bill, which covers 119 pages and includes controversial provisions involving reorganization of the District government, has been considered by a number of citizens associations, some of which have opposed it and some have approved. Of the associations disapproving, at least three took such action because of specific provisions in the bill. Other associations, having previously endorsed the principle of home rule or the old Auchincloss bill, took no further action, feeling that they had given sufficient indication of their position.

The fact that two referenda have been held on the general question of home rule, with results overwhelmingly in its favor, has been regarded by many as indicative of the sentiment of the people of the District. The really democratic method of determining whether the people desire this legislation is to permit them to vote upon it under the conditions set forth in the measure itself.

It is worthy of note that the Young Republican National Federation, made up of more than 2400 State and local organizations throughout the country, endorsed home rule for the District at its national convention in 1949. In so doing, the Young Republicans were following a plank in the Republican Party platform of 1948.

The Republican State Committee for the District has taken no definite stand in the matter. Some of its leaders, however, have been active in opposition to the principle of the election of municipal officials while loudly demanding that our un-American status be ended by the passage of a Constitutional amendment authorizing the District to be represented in the House and Senate. This is 50 percent Americanization, and no more inconsistent attitude can be taken than to urge one measure of suffrage while denying the right of local self-government.

A Pretty Fair Bill

THE District appropriation bill passed by the House aggregated nearly 113 million dollars. When money is added for the East Capitol st. bridge, it will approximate 115 million dollars, some four million dollars less than the Commissioners asked. Thus, there should be a surplus at the end of the fiscal year, which is desirable as a basis for much needed capital improvements. While some of the reductions can hardly be justified, the over-all picture is not too discouraging, unless the Senate adheres to the 10 percent reduction in the Federal payment voted in the House. This, of course, is, in effect, the most important feature of the entire bill.

Some Better, Anyway

THE DUPONT CIRCLE underpass has been dedicated. This brings to a close a much debated matter and gives relief to the Connecticut ave. merchants. It is hoped that it will also relieve traffic conditions around the circle.

Only the future can determine whether those who insisted that the pass be built on a line with Massachusetts ave. were correct. Everyone will agree, however, that this one is an improvement over the previous nightmare at these intersections, with streetcars running around the wrong side of the circle.

Professional Caliber

WITH ALL DUE respect to the orators at the celebration of I-Am-An-American Day on the East Front of the Capitol, the most interesting feature was the remarkable singing of the Sesquicentennial Chorus of 200 voices. While they are said to be amateurs, they sang like professionals, and their rendition of the Battle Hymn of the Republic received many compliments from the audience.

THE HOUSE last Tuesday approved a bill for civil government and home rule for the Navy-controlled Island of Guam. This, very frankly, leaves us speechless.

Maryland Affairs

An Enemy Look at Lane's Leap

By James P. Connolly

OPPOSITION reports of Governor Lane's meeting in the Executive Mansion Tuesday with his administration and political leaders, at which he announced his candidacy for reelection, make the parley appear somewhat less rosy than hitherto published accounts had it—a difference that is only natural, perhaps, since it is the view from the other side of the fence.

CONNOLLY

Anyway, for what it is worth, the enemy intelligence is that the Governor's aides advised him that his arch rival for the Democratic nomination, George P. Mahoney, definitely has become a man to be reckoned with, although he might be beaten in a hard campaign.

If the eavesdroppers are accurate, Governor Lane opened the meeting by reviewing his record, stating that he had done his best and believed he had given a good administration—which he has—and asking those around him for their individual opinions on his giving another one. He said he did not want to jeopardize the party's prospects.

Former Mayor Howard W. Jackson, first to raise his hand, declared he was with the Governor "100 percent" for a second term. He did not attempt to appraise the political situation or the public temper, but his successor, Mayor "Tommy" D'Alesandro did—in typically forthright D'Alesandro terms.

Own Bailiwick a Truant

MAYOR "TOMMY" said that, as matters stood, the Governor could be sure of carrying only one ward in Baltimore City—the Eighth, Representative "Eddie" Garmatz's own. Nevertheless, continued Mayor "Tommy," he was ready to take off his coat and risk a bloody nose in what looked like a tough fight.

Note: The tougher the Mayor can make the fight appear, the more credit he can claim if it is won. Representative Garmatz is a close personal and political friend of his and, one might say, a protege. But there is no doubt that there is strong sentiment in the Mayor's home district, the First, for Mahoney. Governor Lane failed to carry it in the last election.

Christian H. Kahl, president of the Board of Baltimore County Commissioners, paid his personal respects to the Governor, but added that he faces formidable opposition. Kahl said Mahoney has made considerable progress in the industrial areas of Baltimore County and that he (Kahl) would have to talk to "his people" before he could commit himself.

James H. (Jack) Pollack, Fourth District leader in Baltimore, was quoted as talking along the same line—that the going looks difficult and he would have to talk to "his people." Again, the harder the going can be made to look, the more credit can be claimed if the fight is won. Pollack's control over his district is the firmest in the State.

Sasscer Comes Out Flatly

JOSEPH M. GEORGE, an administration stalwart, a member of the Public Service Commission and a former State Senator from Queen Anne's County, cautioned the Governor against swallowing whole the optimistic estimates by his supporting press of sentiment on the Eastern Shore. George said Mahoney might take at least two counties on the Shore.

A cautious consideration of the Shore also was suggested by State Bank Commissioner J. Millard Tawes, a favorite son of the Shore, who has been mentioned as the Governor's probable running mate for Comptroller.

Finally, Representative Lansdale G. Sasscer of the Fifth District, probably the most enthusiastic supporter of the Governor and certainly one of the most reticent (the flying Sasscer never uses two words where one will do), declared for a second term flatly and confidently, and that was that.

So run the minutes of the meeting from outsiders who think they had a listening post within. And it is quite possible, considering the skullduggery and the intricacies of politics, that they had. They say, further, that however pessimistic were the reports made to the Governor, the natural inclination under the circumstances would be to soften them.

In his own account of the meeting, Governor Lane made a simple announcement of his candidacy and said that he expected to have the support of all who were there. One of those there was State Comptroller James J. Lacy, whose differences with the Governor are common knowledge.

Some of Lacy's friends were mystified, having thought that, because of those differences, he would be for Mahoney. Lacy's intimates, however, had a simple explanation of the mystery.

They said there was personal rivalry or jealousy between him and Mahoney. Both came from substantially the same background. Nevertheless, Lacy accepted an invitation to speak at a big Mahoney rally Friday night, thereby reviving the mystery and making it more mystifying than ever.

A Fishing Captain Reminisces

DRAGGERMAN'S HAUL: The Personal History of a Connecticut Fishing Captain, by Ellery Thompson. Viking Press. $3.

A DRAGGERMAN fishes by dragging large cone-shaped nets along the bottom of the ocean. His boat is probably a 30 to 60-foot Diesel-powered craft, may have been designed by one of the best draggermen of all, Capt. Ellery Thompson, and is likely to operate out of Stonington, Conn. as Thompson does. This unusual mariner, whose autobiography we have here, also paints, plays a trumpet (his radar in a fog) and rejoices in his bachelorhood. His material for yarning—storms, whales, rum-running, fishing boats and fishing people, the docks and harbors of New London, Mystic, Noank, Quambaug, and Stonington, Fishers Island and Block Island Sounds—is first-rate. But the captain's smirking and bridling will make even the staunchest of Connecticut Yankees wince.

A Brittle Satire on Monogamy

Female 'Friends' Etched in Acid

By Sterling North

THE CIRCLE OF THE DAY. By Helen Howe. Simon & Schuster. 265 pp. $3.

GOD save me from my friends (runs an old English proverb); I can take care of my enemies.

Such is at least one of the morals of Helen Howe's brisk and brittle satire on so-called monogamy in a recent Year of Grace, a selection of which the Literary Guild may well be proud.

HELEN HOWE

Miss Howe, of the writing and lecturing Howes, could commit a condensed version of her novel to memory and amuse sophisticated audiences by rendering it as a monologue. The well-trained ear will catch many of the cadences and speech idiosyncrasies which she mimics so well from the platform.

Her attitude toward her defenseless characters is as acidulous as vinegar, though she tries to keep on the alkaline side by adding occasional pinches of baking soda, resulting in a continuous fizz.

Not since Clare Boothe Luce projected a score of self-portraits and called her play "The Women" have we had such caustic etchings of females posing as counselors and friends.

But even the victims of this satirist's wit will probably agree that she ranks only a little below Mrs. Trollope and Dorothy Parker in her lethal observations on the "Domestic Manners of the Americans."

The Classic Unities

MISS HOWE, who curtsies to very few of the other conventions, does pay tribute to the classic unities of time, place and action.

Time: The day of May 25, 1948.

Place: New York City from a home base on East 57th st.

Action: A woman's marriage is all but shattered and then all but repaired between sunup and sundown.

As the curtain goes up, you can practically hear the little Disney birds twittering in the happy, happy apartment of Faith and Eric Millet, who are celebrating their tenth wedding anniversary.

Their 8-year-old daughter, Fay, gives her parents a handmade birdhouse for their country place at Mount Kisko, and the enthusiasm of both parents for this work of juvenile art is a painful tape-recording of a million such scenes. Eric gives Faith a rare Thatcheria Mirabilis for her shell collection.

But into this Eden slithers the serpent via the telephone wire. Dusty de Chambord calls to tell her dear friend, Faith Millet, that she has seen Eric in the park playing with a 4-year-old boy who bears a striking resemblance. Eric, with a combination of misery and defiance, admits paternity of the child by another woman.

During the round of her busy day, Faith visits the beauty parlor, attends a Liberal Arts Club luncheon, has a session with the head of Fay's fashionable school, goes to Cartier's to pick up a gold cigarette case for Eric, has champagne with an old beau, Freddy, sees at a distance the little boy in the park, and returns to the apartment for what, in the old fashioned problem novels, would have been the obligatory scene and denouement.

A Woman's Advisers

AND during this same circle of her day, we meet Faith's closest friends and learn to know them principally through the sort of advice they give the bewildered woman concerning the threat to her marriage.

A wealthy, world-weary Southampton hostess tells Faith to forget her husband's infidelity. To her it seems utterly unimportant, modern morals being what they are.

A solid, middle-class, Midwestern college girl friend tells Faith to break with Eric and marry her old flame, Freddy.

Freddy suggests a six-week extramarital rendezvous in Paris.

Dusty de Chambord knows the nicest ranch near Reno.

And Faith, coming home to find Eric reading "Stuart Little" to their daughter Fay, finds that she must make up her mind at that very moment.

In less intelligent hands, this novel would be light reading, indeed, a slick story for one of the women's magazines. But Helen Howe makes it a sort of Restoration Comedy of the Kinsey era, with sharp but unspoken comments upon the superficiality of a variety of pampered wife, and other adder-tongued, idle, parasitical females.

There are certain technical flaws beneath the enameled surface of this novel, however, which keep it from being a little masterpiece. The irony and pity are not completely blended. The switches from sentiment to satire are not always successful. Longish biographical sketches of the characters are inserted as they appear upon the stage, thus slowing the pace of the story. And the big scene in which Faith sees the little boy, Sandy, through the park fence—a scene which should have been overwhelming to the reader—narrowly misses its intended effect.

But the very fact that the minute imperfections can be listed in a single paragraph reveals how near this novel comes to being absolutely first-rate satire.

Notes on the Margin

By Lee Grove

ALBA DE CESPEDES, wife of Franco Bounous, first secretary of the Italian Embassy, is a blond and eloquent authority on that whimsical and arbitrary thing known as censorship in a dictatorship.

Her first novel was published in the Italy of Il Duce a decade ago. Nothing happened then, but when the book began to be translated into numerous other languages the censorship decided there must be something anti-fascist about it, or otherwise why would all those foreigners be interested in it? So the novel, which has been translated into 24 languages, as a glance at a bookshelf in the Bounous villa at 1413 35th st. nw., confirms, was banned in Italy.

Parenthetically, the book was never published in the United States, but there is an English edition titled, "There Is No Turning Back."

Writing under the dictatorship was an irritating business, because the ban did not fall on a book sometimes until the book had been circulating for some time, Mrs. Bounous said, and writers were frequently forbidden to do any further writing. Sometimes they would continue, however, hoping it would be overlooked by the not always efficient censorship.

One of the major effects of the censorship was to turn writers away from the novel form—"because it is almost impossible to write a novel without social content"—and to writing lyric descriptions and metaphysical stories.

Next to the various editions of her first novel on the shelf are bound volumes of "Mercuro," a literary and art review which Mrs. Bounous started when the frost of fascism began to leave the ground. There was a Resistance number, of course, and other special numbers, and writers like Hemingway were among those published.

Because of the shortage of printing supplies, ink and paper were apt to vary from issue to issue. Circulation of "Mercuro" was high—about 19,000 copies—in its early days because people were so starved for reading matter that they would pawn their watches to buy books, Mrs. Bounous said, but after a while people began to spend their money for other things and circulation dwindled.

Mrs. Bounous intends to return to Italy this summer and work with a collaborator on a play. She will be back in time for publication in January by Alfred Knopf of a translation—not yet titled—of her second novel, which appeared in Italy in 1949.

Besides the two novels, she has two books of short stories and a book of poems which she deprecates as a youthful literary indiscretion, to her credit.

Selfish Woman, Busy Man

Portrait of 2 Parents Delicately Filled In

SON AND STRANGER. By David Demarest Lloyd. Houghton, Mifflin. 209 pp. $2.50.

DAVID Demarest Lloyd, of Alexandria, has unfolded the story of an American father and mother who never knew their son, nor saw themselves as they were, until after his death.

LLOYD

The instrument of revelation is Mary Harris, daughter of a Cambridge publican and the unwed mother of Matthew Milan's son.

When Luke and Belle Milam of Cedar Rapids went to England to visit the grave of Matthew, an American flier killed in 1944, they had no idea that he even had a sweetheart. It was the finding of the little bouquet of flowers on his grave that led them to realize that he not only had found love in England, but had left a son.

Jealous Hostility

BELLE, a selfish woman who had convinced her husband that she was very "sensitive," and who had tried to dominate her son, and Luke, who in his ambition for business success had never had time for his son, reacted to the discovery in slightly different ways.

Luke liked Mary immensely and was entranced with his grandson. Belle was jealously hostile, and utterly insensitive to the feelings of Mary. That Matthew had told Mary not to tell his parents of the existence of young Matthew, depicting their characters quite honestly, did not further endear Mary to Belle.

Inevitably, Luke and Belle try to "buy" little Matthew from Mary. The elder Milams needed the tot in their own lives, and did not grasp the text given them by the admirable Mary: "Matthew and I learned a great thing, in our loving and talking; you must love the other person for himself, not because you need to love him for yourself." The attempt to take little Matthew home to Cedar Rapids fails, of course.

Unutterable Type

THE step by step revelation of the character of Luke and Belle is handled very well by Lloyd in this, his first novel. Luke, surprised that his son was a Socialist, surprised that he wrote poetry, is a pathetic and likable person. Belle is a recognizable type; and, despite Lloyd's soft handling, is best described by a word not yet admitted to polite newspaper usage. Though Matthew, from beyond the grave, has forgiven his parents, the reader may be a little skeptical of its effecting any permanent change in Belle's character.

Lloyd has told his story of family relationships with delicate perception, managing to avoid sentimentality until the last paragraph. Unfortunately, the reader there is given a spoonful of undisguised treacle—Luke and Belle standing at the foot of Matthew's grave at sunrise.—LEE GROVE.

Things Are Getting Better

A Vigorous Axman Fells Myth of 'Good Old Days'

THE AGE OF INDISCRETION, by Clyde Brion Davis. Lippincott. 284 pp. $3.

ALL of us are familiar with the prophets of doom (more numerous than ever in these atomic days) who moan that things aren't what they used to be. Of course they aren't—but then they never were. If such a gripe were uttered in the hearing of Clyde Brion Davis, he would come back with a vigorous: "Things are a lot better now than they used to be." In fact, Mr. Davis has written a whole book to prove this point, and a lively book it is.

Our author is particularly incensed at the gloomy mouthings of what he calls "aging esthetes." T. S. Eliot is his prime target for saying: "We can assert with some confidence that our own period is one of decline, that the standards of culture are lower than they were 50 years ago." To this contention, Mr. Davis retorts brusquely: "Unmitigated nonsense."

He has no patience with those who have created a blue fog of sighs for the old days. He thinks he can remember those days better than most of the yearners, and makes out an excellent case for his skepticism by contrasting the life he knew with life as it is now. He does this by using his home town of Chillicothe, Mo., as a model, and shows life today to be a good deal easier, healthier and fuller than it was then.

Mr. Davis writes with the vigor of a man felling trees, and the arguments he refutes lie around him like toppled timber. His illustrations and anecdotes are amusing, but they are made doubly effective by his sardonic wit and his biting sarcasm.

This is a refreshing polemic that will arouse plenty of discussion everywhere.

The Poison of War

WORLD WITHOUT HEROES, by Arthur C. Fields. Whittlesey House. 271 pp. $3.

SINCE war is hell, no accurate picture of it can be anything but scarifying. This book shocks and distresses the reader, not because of its picture of physical carnage, but because of its account of moral atrophy. The story is really a case history of what hatred can do to civilized human beings when war has poisoned their minds.

Germany, prostrate before the advancing Allied armies, is the world without heroes. Fields presents a squad of soldiers—Kingsley, a college boy who has learned how to kill; Slate, who prods the men to hate all Germans; a pompous officer who places discipline before humanity, and others. The retreating Germans hit and run, then meekly surrender. There is no one to take vengeance on—so, in time, the men are driven to wreck their revenge on an empty town. They turn into beasts, looting and destroying in a blind frenzy.

Mr. Fields writes with a sensitivity and perception rare in a first novelist. His concern is with the moral deterioration engendered by war. "To work men up to such a fever pitch is the real danger of war," he says. "They are blind with hate, they see nothing; they kill and loot and capture and rape. There is no repentance, no feeling of guilt. Given enough time, all is forgotten. But what about the wrecked lives, smashed dreams, rubbled hopes?"

In this grim and powerful story Mr. Fields has isolated the virus of war and held it up for the reader's close inspection. It is not a pleasant thing to see.

'Unimportant Socialist Frills'

Wishful Evaluation of Britain

ASSIGNMENT TO AUSTERITY: An American Family in Britain. By Herbert and Nancie Matthews. Bobbs-Merrill. 338 pp. $3.

"IN ANY EVENT, the attempted solution (in Britain) will be along orthodox lines of Western economy, with a few unimportant Socialist frills."

That, I submit, coming from Herbert Matthews, for the past five years chief London correspondent of the New York Times, is dangerously misleading.

Matthews, who states that his sympathies are Liberal rather than Laborite, knows that England is solidly committed to socialism. True, the most recent election has made the present Labor government cautious. But, as Matthews himself admits, the Tories, the Liberals and, of course, the Laborites, are all left-of-center, and vie with each other in defense of a continuing "welfare state."

What does he mean, "Socialist frills?"

Before the war, more than 7000 Britons had net incomes of $24,000 or more. Now less than 70 have net incomes of $14,000.

One after another, the country houses of England are going to the national trust. Death duties often eat up three-quarters of an estate.

While taxes have skyrocketed, the cost of living to the (vanishing) middle class has more than doubled while rising some 75 percent for the laboring class.

No Permanent Solution

THE COST OF PRODUCTION in England (due to obsolete or obsolescent machinery, high taxes, low man-hour efficiency, lack of competition, nepotism, class consciousness, the long weekend, protected markets and antiquated manufacturing methods) could not meet world prices anywhere were it not for continuous pump-priming from the United States plus the recent devaluation of the pound.

Neither desperate expedient is a permanent solution for a fantastically overpopulated island, which is in the process of losing both its markets and its empire. And Matthews is talking sheer nonsense when he insists that since the Scandinavian countries can live well without an empire, so, perhaps, can England.

Matthews' sympathies (and those of his English-born wife, despite her petty grousing throughout this book) were with the nation which rose to unparalleled heights at Dunkirk and during the Battle of Britain.

He has understandable admiration for the courage and determination of a nation which has continued to take strict rationing, confiscatory taxes and Spartan austerity for five solid years after helping "win the war."

He is right when he says that the fortunes of England often have been desperately low in the last 300 years, but that through English character and determination the nation has always come through. (Looting India and much of Africa also helped!)

No one will deny his insistence that England often has led the way politically toward democracy and civil liberties. But he is letting wishful thinking paralyze his judgment if he believes that force of character alone can save a nation committed to a policy which only can lead (gradually, in the case of a great democracy) to totalitarianism.

Massive Furbelows

UNIMPORTANT Socialist frills?

Does Matthews mean, by any chance, cradle-to-grave welfare assistance at the cost of billions of pounds?

The nationalization of one great industry after another?

The Schacht-like rigging of international trade within the sterling bloc?

The sabotaging of the inevitable United States of Europe?

Public housing principally at the expense of the upper and middle classes for the already carefully protected laborers?

A bureaucracy which begins to rival that of Nazi Germany and Soviet Russia as a drain upon the income of the nation?

A trend so firmly established toward further socialism that even the Tories will not be able to reverse it?

Unimportant Socialist frills indeed!

The Times correspondent and his wife obviously didn't feel the pinch as does the average Englishman. Living in an apartment which Nancie snobbishly points out was "next to the Dorchester," with one or two servants, the children at boarding school and black market restaurants always available, life wasn't too tough, I should imagine.

An Honest Effort

MATTHEWS, obviously, is trying very hard to be objective on a subject which has suffered because of partisan passions. He is honestly trying to evaluate the good (and the bad) that has come since the "theoretical" Marxists took over in England. But, like too many "liberals," he has his feet firmly planted in the clouds.

I suggest that he go back and read "Imperial Germany and the Industrial Revolution" by Thorstein Veblen, which more than 35 years ago explained why England was inevitably on the skids, and why, incidentally, Germany was incredibly dangerous to the rest of the world.

I am willing to agree with Matthews that if England goes down, so may the rest of the democratic segment of the planet. America has shown that she knows this cardinal fact by coming to her rescue in two World Wars and writing off billions in "loans." But to oversimplify the desperate problem by backing bitterly class-conscious socialists in a world where only liberal capitalism is solvent, is to aid and abet disaster.—STERLING NORTH.

A Look Inside 'Little Kremlin' on E. 13th St.

By Edwin D. Gritz

MEN WITHOUT FACES. By Louis F. Budenz. Harpers. 305 pp. $3.50.

IN WRITING of "the Communist conspiracy" in the United States, Louis F. Budenz provides Americans with another stark picture of what Sovietism is all about.

Although this new work by the former managing editor of the Daily Worker sometimes labors well known facts, its net effect is to remind Americans that Communist "politics" is not a give-and-take game. The stakes are high, and for keeps.

Then, too, "Men Without Faces" contains a revealing glimpse of the "Little Kremlin"—the Daily Worker building on East 13th st., New York, where "I stepped from American to alien soil every morning." In this nine-story structure, says Budenz, was the nerve center of Communist activities in the United States.

"Down from the ninth floor," recounts the former Communist leader, "came several times each day at least two of these party bosses—to direct, harangue, command, in accordance with the latest directive received through 'the channels from abroad.'"

Persisting throughout the book is Budenz's conviction that "the fanatical hope, if you can call it that, which gives drive to these conspirators is the belief in 'The World October.' This promised extension to the entire globe of the October Russian revolution which set up the Soviet dictatorship is the dynamo of the Communist movement."

As for the means of achieving this, Budenz draws attention to what was called "a party of the new type." This, quotes Budenz, "means a disciplined party, whose sole goal is the overthrow of its own country's imperialism, the abolition of capitalism and the government apparatus by organized force.

"It calls for comrades who are disciplined, who are steeled to meet any emergency, who must be prepared for organized violence, for street fighting, for breaking down the morale of soldiery."

How much of this is now politically dated or mere rhetoric is, of course, difficult to say. But therein lies the book's greatest virtue—it can shock political playboys.

Contemplative readers will find that Budenz, knowingly or unknowingly, makes this so-called conspiracy appear unduly great—as if Red extremists are sprouting everywhere without opposition. Nevertheless, his book is another timely warning to strengthen our counter-forces and make the American climate wholly unsuited for such conspiratorial seeds.

The Coffin Corner . . .

THE 22 BROTHERS, by Dana Sage (Simon & Schuster, $2.50). Donald O'Keefe Adams (Don O'K), wealthy South American industrialist-adventurer, encounters strange underground organizations, subdues same after terrific jungle adventures. More fantastic characters than you can shake a stick at. Slightly incredible hair-raiser.

CONTRABAND, by Cleve Adams (Knopf, $2.50). Satchel full of cocaine interests Federal Agent Reed Smith, who stages all sorts of spectacular shenanigans with tough California hombres, sultry gals, etc., before getting cache and man. Ace-high thriller.

CALAMITY FAIR, by Wade Miller (Farrar, Straus, $2.50). Man of Private Detective Max Thursday's description guilty of several West Coast slayings—so Thursday has to sleuth himself out of slippery situation. He does so—with shrewdness and considerable violence. Good puzzler, with surprise payoff.

MAKE HASTE TO LIVE, by The Gordons. (Doubleday, $2.25). Tragic past comes back to haunt successful businesswoman in Western town, and take her life. It takes a sharp-shooting old cowboy to scotch killer with defense-above-the-law. Better than average.

A complete study of highways in America—from planning and construction to their effect on our national life.

HIGHWAYS

Edited by
and WHEATON J. LANE

• Leading authorities have surveyed here almost all aspects of the highway question, from such broad considerations as the effect of the highway on the social and economic pattern of American life to the specific problems of design, construction, landscaping, illumination, traffic safety and control. An opening section gives the historical background of the modern American highway, with chapters on highways of the past in the Near East, China, the Roman Empire, Great Britain, and early America.

Editorially sponsored by Princeton's Bureau of Urban Research, of which Mr. Labatut is chairman. Selected bibliographical references, a comprehensive index, charts, and 32 pages of illustrations are included. $7.50

ATTORNEY GENERAL McGRATH TEES OFF IN CELEBRITIES TOURNAMENT NEXT WEEKEND

Star-Studded Field Plays at Army Navy Country Club Saturday and Sunday at noon each day

This Morning

—With Shirley Povich

To Whom It May Concern:

CONNIE MACK'S shake-up of the A's, including his demotion of Son Earl to the farm system, spikes what had been prevalent reports that he had signed away his authority . . . Mickey Cochrane's overnight elevation from bullpen catcher to general manager of the club must be a new record in the department of promotions . . . the National Celebrities Golf Tournament next weekend will be different. The gallery will be permitted to take cameras on the course and snap pictures whenever they like . . . betting commissioners have radically revised the pennant race odds. The Yankees who were 2-to-1 shots at the start of the season have replaced the Red Sox as the favorite. The Yanks are now rated 1-to-2, and the Red Sox who opened the season as the 3-to-2 choice, are now 3 to 1. Detroit is 10 to 1, and you can almost name your own price on the others . . . supporters of the Phillies in the National League may be shocked to learn they are third choices, at 5 to 1, behind the Dodgers and Cardinals . . . Brooklyn, like the Yankees, is the 1-to-2 favorite, and the Cardinals are rated at 2½ to 1 . . . Catcher Mickey Grasso of the Nats will always gratefully remember Hitler's birthday, April 20. That was the date in 1945 that he made a break for freedom and escaped a German prison camp . . . Jack Onslow must have been fired as manager of the White Sox on second thought. One week ago, General Manager Frank Lane said: "We are not considering a change in managers."

CORDINATION is the hardest thing to acquire in a golf swing, says Lloyd Mangrum in Esquire: "What happens in a good golf swing happens too fast to make coordination a conscious operation" .. before the Detroit Tigers can show any profit they must draw $1,850,000 at the gate, says General Manager Billy Evans. Among the club's fixed expenses: the $90,000 cost of painting the Briggs Stadium stands every year; $150,000 for office help; $500,000 for player payroll, $90,000 for scouting staff plus $90,000 expenses . . . the Tigers accepted $70,000 for the television rights to 35 of their 77 home games, turned down an offer of $200,000 for the whole package . . . Attorney General McGrath's attempt to strip the racing syndicates of their leased wires from the tracks could drive 'em underground and start gang warfare over the bootlegging rights . . . National Football League teams are preparing for their second round of draft choices when the players of the defunct Los Angeles Dons and Chicago Hornets go into the player-pool next Friday . . . liquid salt injections are the newest cure for sore pitching arms . . . Bill Willis, the good guard of the Cleveland Browns, was voted on the All-America team in his last year at Ohio State but he is more proud of another honor that was voted him—Student of the Year . . . the Nats won't be a big league ball club until they set up a downtown ticket office.

When, Where, How to Get There For Celebrities Golf Next Weekend

Information about the National Celebrities Golf Tournament next Saturday and Sunday at the Army-Navy Country Club.

11:30 A. M.—Exhibition each day by Jimmy Nichols, one-armed champion.

12:00 NOON—Tournament officially starts each day.

How to get there: By bus, take A B & W at 12th and Pennsylvania to South Pentagon and transfer to shuttle bus which takes you to first tee: by auto, take Highway No. 1 over either Memorial Bridge or 14th Street Bridge, watch closely for turns marked Army-Navy dr.

PARKING: Good idea to park in south parking area at the Pentagon. Acres of room. From there take A B & W shuttle bus to first tee at club. Some parking areas on back or west side of club grounds off Glebe rd.

TRAFFIC: All traffic leading to the club must enter on Army-Navy dr. This will be a one-way avenue with the exit from the grounds leading to Glebe rd.

CONCESSIONS: Stands will be conveniently located on course with drinks, hot dogs and sandwiches available. Souvenir programs will be sold.

Where money goes: All proceeds will go to boys' and girls' charities in support of the Attorney General's efforts to combat juvenile delinquency.

Chisox Win First Under Corriden, 6-1

Chicago, May 27 (AP).—The heretofore light-hitting Chicago White Sox pounded Mike Garcia and Jesse Flores for 12 assorted hits today to launch the major league managerial career of 62-year-old John "Red" Corriden with a 6-1 victory over the Cleveland Indians.

Corriden, a White Sox coach, became the team's eighteenth manager Friday night when he replaced Jack Onslow. Onslow was dismissed after the Chicagoans dropped 22 of their first 30 games.

Little Billy Pierce, a 23-year-old lefty who isn't any taller than his new skipper, pitched the distance on a yield of eight hits to assure Corriden's opening game success.

One of Pierce's four walks led to Cleveland's only run in the fourth. Dave Mitchell and Bob Kennedy followed with singles after Jim Hegan received the gift.

Successive singles by Dave Philley, Cass Michaels and Hank Majeski enabled the White Sox to pull into a 1-1 tie in the sixth.

Thereafter the White Sox blended five singles with Roberto Avila's error to score four more runs to clinch the verdict for Corriden.

Tigers Outlast Browns; Evers Bats in Five Runs

St. Louis, May 27 (AP).—Hoot Evers batted in five runs, three on singles, one on a double and one with a long fly, to help the Detroit Tigers come from behind and down the St. Louis Browns, 8 to 6, today.

The Browns pushed in three runs in the last of the fourth, loading the bases with no outs, but a strikeout by Art Houtteman and a double play stopped the late St. Louis rally.

Say Ya Want More for Your Money, Folks? Step Right Up, This Deal's Got Everything

By Morris Siegel
Post Reporter

So ya say ya want more for your money, folks, ya say you want a bargain. That's what I'm here for so step right up 'cause I got a bargain for ya, the greatest bargain since the Indians bought Manhattan for 24 bucks.

Yes-sir-ree, folks, this is a genuine, 14-karat bargain that can't be duplicated anywhere. What's that you're asking, folks, what'm I talkin' about?

I'm talkin' about the National Celebrities Golf Tournament next Saturday and Sunday at the Army Navy Country Club. That's what I'm talkin' about, folks, that's my bargain for you.

It's a two-day show, folks, and it only costs you $3.60 for the two days, folks. Imagine, not five dollars, not ten dollars, not twenty dollars, only $3.60, folks, just sixty cents more than it costs you to park your car illegally.

What's that you're askin' son, whatcha gonna get for your money, Well, don't go 'way, son, 'cause you don't bother me. I'm dee-lighted to tell you more about this sensational affair.

You're gonna see two of the slickest gals that ever swung a golf club, that's Alice and Marlene Bauer. And then you're gonna see Babe Didrikson, the greatest gal athlete this country has ever known. Yes-sir-ee folks, the Babe's gonna be there and so's Patty Berg, that little frecklefaced gal who has all the world on her side. But just a minute, folks, don't step up and buy those tickets now, wait just a minute and let me tell you what else I'm gonna give ya for ya money.

I got Ben Hogan for ya, yes-sir-ree, the Mighty Mite himself, in person. He's won about everything there is to win in golf, and he's gonna get a special citation from the Attorney General for making the greatest comeback in sports.

Ya remember Hogan's auto accident, folks, and ya remember they were sayin' the little fellow would be lucky to live, much less play golf again? He's back, folks, but ya don't have to take my word for it, just ask ole Sammy Snead, folks, he'll

Bolero Sets World Mark

Albany, Calif., May 27 (AP).—Bolero won the $10,000-added Pacific Handicap today and set a world's record for the six furlongs with a time of 1.08 1-5. Roman In was second; Blue Border third.

Fort Dupont Golfer Scores Hole-in-One

L. J. Newton made a hole-in-one yesterday on Fort Dupont's 135-yard second hole. Mr. Newton made his ace with a No. 7 iron.

Chris Henriott, Lee Scheftell, and William Baker played in his foursome.

Braves Beat Newcombe, 7-1

Boston, May 27 (AP).—Boston's Braves smashed four runs across the plate in the second inning tonight as they defeated Brooklyn, 7-1, dropping the Dodgers into a tie with Philadelphia for first place in the National League.

A chilled crowd of 24,903 saw the starting, and losing Don Newcombe leave the game in the Braves' big inning at his request. Newcombe complained of a pain in his right shoulder.

Dick (Redskins) McCann Buys Hope-Celebs Tickets

EVERYONE seems to be buying tickets to the National Celebrities golf tournament at the Army-Navy Country Club next Saturday and Sunday, and to the Bob Hope-Celebrities show at the Armory next Saturday night.

Right at the head of the line to purchase a set of "four of the best" yesterday was Dick McCann, general manager of the Washington Redskins. He asked for a position near a post but there aren't any at either the golf course or the Armory.

The golf field will include Hope, Danny Kaye, Arthur Godfrey, Babe Didrikson, Marlene and Alice Bauer, Patty Berg, Ben Hogan, Gene Sarazen, Henry Picard, Milton Berle, Walter Winchell, Charlie Justice, Frank Leahy and dozens of other famous people.

Tickets for the golf tournament at the Army-Navy Country Club and for the Hope-Celebrities show, are on sale at the following places: Champion Sports Shop, 816 13th st. nw.; Fairway Sports Shop, 1328 G st. nw.; Sports Center, 8th and D sts. nw., and in the lobby of The Washington Post, 1337 E st. nw.

ing while Tebbetts was hitting into a double play.

Ted Williams banged Marrero for his second straight hit—a two-bagger to center—in the third inning to make it 2-0, Red Sox. He scored Dom DiMaggio, who had opened with a single to left.

In the fourth, when they made it 3-0, Marrero pitched a single to Goodman and then wild-pitched him to second. Dobson personally fetched the run in with a single to center.

Marrero didn't last the inning out. He left under queer circumstances. He struck out Pesky, and ironically was lifted. Grasso fumbled the strike-out pitch and Pesky reached base, advancing Dom DiMaggio to second. Hittle moved in and wild-pitched both runners up a base before getting Williams on a grounder to Robinson.

Sherry Robertson beat out a bunt that led to a Nat run in the fifth, but they muffed a bigger inning. Yost doubled over Williams' head to score Robertson, and the overran third base on Coan's single which Stephens knocked down. He started for home unmindful of Coach George Myatt's frantic flagging, and lost his race back to thir dbase where Stephens tagged him with a nose-dive.

Eddie Robinson's triple to right center with one out opened the Nats' two-run sixth. Mele promptly singled to left to score him, and moved to second when Robertson walked. With two out, Grasso tied the score with a single to left.

Hittle was bravely trying to keep the Nats in the ball game. He threw two hitless innings at the Red Sox,

He couldn't survive Yost's two-base wild throw on Dobson's grounder in the tenth, though. Dobson took third on DiMaggio's single to left and scored on Pesky's single to center.

The Nats put the first man on base in the eighth, ninth and tenth innings, but couldn't get him in against Dobson. The painful failure was in the tenth when Robinson opened with his double and was sacrificed to third. Dente and Robertson left him there.

Scarborough Pelted

The Red Sox caught up with Scarborough for past indignations when they belted him for five runs in the first inning of the second game.

DiMaggio and Pesky opened with singles, and Scarborough gave walks to Williams and Wright. Goodman unloaded a triple to center for the third and fourth runs of the inning. Batts scored Goodman with a double to center.

Left Hander Chuck Stobbs didn't yield the Nats a hit until Ortiz got an infield single with two out in the third. Pitching one-hit ball, he had a 6-0 lead going into the fifth.

All of a sudden, with two out in the fifth, the Nats wrenched a pair of runs out of Stobbs. Yost walked, and scored all the way from first on Dente's line drive double to right center. Ortiz's pop fell out of Goodman's reach for a single, scoring Dente. Robinson later walked but Mele's popup left two on base.

Scarborough steadied smartly after his rough first inning and shut Sox out for four straight innings before he was lifted for Pinch Hitter Mike Grasso in the seventh.

Stobbs fanned Grasso and also Yost in the seventh to maintain his record of at least one strike out in every inning. Going into the eighth he had eight to his credit.

Stobbs quickly upped his strikeout total to ten at the start of the eighth by fanning Ortiz and Robinson to maintain his 6-2 lead.

Lou Brissie Has 3-Hitter; Joost Slams Two Homers

Philadelphia, May 27 (AP).—Lefty Lou Brissie snapped the New York Yankees' nine-game winning streak today as he pitched the lowly Philadelphia Athletics to a 6-1 victory over the world champions.

Brissie gave up only three hits as he turned in his first triumph to halt his six-game losing spell.

Meanwhile the A's cracked Allie Reynolds and Bob Porterfield for 11 hits, Eddie Joost leading the attack with a pair of home runs.

Joost hit his first homer of the game with two down in the fourth. The A's clinched matters with two runs in the fifth

The victory was the first for the A's under the field leadership of Jimmy Dykes who was named assistant manager last night.

Brecheen Wins 3d With Ease

Cincinnati, May 27. (AP).—The mighty Musial—Stan is the first name—gave Cincinnati pitchers another clubbing today and his two home runs, good for four runs, sparked the St. Louis Cardinals to a 9-1 victory over the Reds.

Musial's two big blasts, each coming with a man on base, gave him three circuit blows in the two games the Cards have played here in the current series.

He also picked up a single for three hits in five times at bat.

Harry Brecheen, winning his third game as against two defeats, went all the way.

The Cardinals got to Herman Wehmeier in a hurry and got enough runs in the first inning to win and that was even before Musial began unlimbering his heavy artillery. Musial went into action in the third. His first homer into the right field bleachers scored Red Schoendienst who had singled and also brought an end to Wehmeier's pitching duties. The Cards had a 5 to 1 lead until the eight when they broke out again.

Marty Marion and Brecheen opened with singles and Marion scored on Tommy Glaviano's double. Brecheen rode home on Schoendienst's fly and Musial followed with his second homer.

9 Marks Fall As SEC Wins Track Meet

Atlanta, May 27 (AP).—Nine records fell tonight as the Southeastern Conference turned back their Southern Conference rivals, 81 to 50, in an inter-loop track meet.

The University of Alabama team lived up to its conference championship by taking high point team honors with 19 points.

North Carolina's brilliant Bill Albans walked off with individual high point honors with 18, only one less than the Alabama total.

The SEC grabbed a quick lead and was never headed.

Cubs' Three Homers Whip Pirates, 7-5

Pittsburgh, May 27 (AP).—Three home runs—two by Hank Sauer—enabled the Chicago Cubs to vanquish the faltering Pirates, 7-5, before a crowd of 10,220 at Forbes Field today.

Sauer hit for the circuit with one man aboard in the first and again with two on in the fifth to account for five of the Cubs' tallies. Roy Smalley, whose grandslam blow won last night's game, got the third Chicago homer. No one was on base.

Paul Minner got credit for his first victory in three starts although he required help in the seventh when the Pirates pushed across three runs. Bob Chesnes started for the Buccos and lost his third game to even his record at three and three.

Ralph Kiner doubled to drive in a run in the ninth but the rally fell short.

33 Indianapolis Berths Filled

Schindler Wins Qualifying Prize, But Wrecks His Motor

Indianapolis, May 27 (AP).—The 33-car starting line-up for the 500-mile Memorial Day race was filled tentatively today.

Twelve cars made qualifying runs at the Indianapolis Speedway today, and 11 moved provisionally into the last four rows of the starting line-up. The twelfth was in and out again—too slow.

Several of the 33 probably will be bumped out of the race by faster cars qualifying tomorrow, the last day.

One-legged Bill Schindler had the top combination of good and bad breaks. He won the $500 prize for the day's fastest qualification as he drove the Auto Shippers Special at 132.690 miles an hour, the sixth fastest qualifying time in the history of the speedway.

Then he broke a piston and tore up his motor. His garage crew hoped to have it back in shape by tomorrow, or at least by race day.

This will be Schindler's first try at the 500, but the Freeport, Long Island, driver long has been a champion Eastern midget driver. He's aided by an artificial leg in the big cars, which have more room, but he drives midgets without it.

Troy Ruttman of Ontario, Calif., made the grade in his second try of the day, driving the Bowes Seal Fast Special at 131.912 miles an hour. He had cracked up the car and injured himself in practice.

Jimmy Jackson of Desert Hot Springs, Calif., put the Cummins diesel in the line-up, but on the ragged edge at 129.208. It was the slowest of the 11 which made the grade today and the second slowest of the tentative 33. It will be out of the race if two or more cars qualify at higher speeds tomorrow. First to go out tomorrow would be Cliff Griffith and the Sarafoff Special, qualified last weekend at 129.014.

The in-and-outer today was Joe James of Van Nuys, Calif., driving the Bob Estes V-8 Special, a semi-stock car. His average of 124.176 was one of the best ever made by that type of car but was five miles an hour too slow for the 1950 race.

BANISHED—A chastised Eddie Stewart reluctantly heads for the dugout last night after being thumbed out of the Nats-Bosox opener at Griffith Stadium. The Washington outfielder got the thumb from Umpire Art Passarella for throwing his bat about 25 feet into the air after taking a third strike in the third inning. He wasn't permitted to play in the second game.

For Nats-Bosox

Fans Four Hours Early

THE 28,000 who watched last evening's twi-night double header of the Nats and Red Sox wasn't quite the biggest crowd of the season—but it was the most eager.

So concerted was the rush for the unreserved seats early in the afternoon, park officials admitted thousands of ticket buyers inside the gates four hours before game time.

The big crowd was feeling pretty grim about that first game in the fourth inning with the Red Sox leading 3-0, but the stadium maintenance men made light of the whole situation. They suddenly threw the switch and the lights went on at 7:20.

Except for Pitcher Joe Dobson and Ted Williams, the Red Sox lineup that faced Marrera was a solid array of .300 hitters. By the end of the third inning, Williams had two hits and also boosted himself up to that figure.

THE NATS' fifth-inning run that cut the Boston lead to 3-1 in the first game was a long time coming. In fact, it was the first run they had scored in their last 24 innings.

After Birdie Tebbetts beat out an infield hit in the eighth inning of the first game, he could rue anew Ken Keltner's failure to touch second base in Boston 12 days ago, which deprived him of a hit. By now he would have had a 23-game streak.

Ed Stewart didn't approach Ted Williams' record for bat-throwing, but he got quicker results. Williams threw his bat 50 feet in the air in Detroit last season and wasn't expelled from the game. Stewart got it from Umpire Passarella after a mere 25-foot heave.

IT WAS a short night's work for Stewart, who was ejected from the scene in the third inning. That meant he was nongrata for the rest of the program and couldn't play in the second game.

Irv Noren won't be ready for a week," said Buck Harris before game time. Three innings later Noren was in the lineup as Stewart's replacement. At that, Harris was probably right. Noren struck out three times in a row, and his readiness was open to doubt, only 13 days before he lost his appendix.

Petit Goes to Hopkins Monday To Treat His $100,000 Pitching Arm

Pittsburgh, May 27 (AP).—Paul Pettit, the Pittsburgh Pirates' $100,000 bonus baby, will go to Johns Hopkins Hospital to Baltimore Monday for treatment of his ailing pitching arm.

The 18-year-old southpaw is under option to New Orleans of the Southern Association. Thus far, the highly touted high school pitcher has failed to live up to his notices.

He had to leave the mound in the first inning of a New Orleans game a week ago. A sharp pain in his pitching arm developed when he tried to get speed—one of his best pitches.

Moore Wins 3 Rifle Events

Laurence Moore of Aberdeen Proving Grounds won all three individual events to register the highest aggregate in the first day of the second annual Spring rifle championship yesterday at the Greenbelt Gun Club.

Moore, Maryland State champion and winner of the 1949 mid-winter national championships at St. Petersburg, Fla., won the 50-yard and 50-meter events with perfect 400 scores and took the 100-yard title with 397x400. His aggregate was 1197x1200.

Runnerup to Moore was Master Sgt. Richard Hanson, varsity rifle coach at Maryland University, who was second in one event and third in two others. Hanson teamed up with Ray Oster, Maryland freshman, to win the doubles with 769x800.

The shooting ends today with competition in the three individual events only.

Army Trims Navy in 15th, 7-5

Annapolis, Md., May 27 .—A two-run error on a weird Navy infield collision under a popup gave Army a 7-5 victory over the Naval Academy in a 15-inning baseball game today.

With two out and the bases loaded in the top of the fifteenth, Arnold Galiffa's high pop fly fell behind the pitcher's mound.

Second baseman Roger Buck collided with their baseman Bob Zastrow as both reached for the falling ball, which dribbled off an upraised glove. Tom Lobe and Tom Fitzpatrick crossed the plate with the winning runs. Buck was credited with the error.

Righthander Ted Griesinger of Pennyan, N. Y., who pitched 12 1-3 innings in a relief role, was the winner. He gave eight hits.

The victory was Army's first since 1945 in the service Academy series after four straight Navy triumphs.

It moved Army into contention for the Eastern Intercollegiate title with a league record of seven wins and two defeats.

Little Judy, owned by Ralph Goss of Columbia City, Ind., and driven by Wilbur Beattie, romped off with both dashes of the Governor's cup 15 class pace last night at Rosecroft Raceway before a crowd of 8000 fans.

The 7-year-old black mare dashed a mile in 2:12 3/5 in the fifth race to return $4.60, $3.40, $3.20 and then came back in the seventh race to go a mile and sixteenth in 2:15 3/5 to return $4.80, $3.00 and $2.80.

In the secondary feature, sixth race a mile classified trot, George Mahony took advantage of every opening to bring Intangible, owned by Octave Blake, home in front in 2:09 3/5, and pay off the biggest win price in the meet at $85.00, $35.80, $14.00.

Purdue Wins Big 10 Golf

Columbus, Ohio, May 27 (AP).—Purdue's five-man team won the Western Conference golf championship today with a 72-hole total of 1465 strokes—far ahead of Ohio State's second place 1510.

Fred Wampler of Purdue had the individual title tied up with 284, four under par, with Tom Nieporte of Ohio State second with 287.

Says Frank Lane

If Corriden Makes Good, He'll Stay as Chisox Pilot

Chicago, May 27 (AP).—If John "Red" Corriden can make a good showing as manager of the Chicago White Sox, he will be back on the job next year.

Frank Lane, general manager of the club, put it this way today:

"He (Corriden) is hired for the balance of the season. If he can prove himself, he will be permanent. We don't like to change managers."

Lane made the statement in an interview 14 hours after Jack Onslow was ousted as manager of the White Sox. Corriden, who had been serving as a coach, was moved up to replace him.

In the reshuffling, the veteran shortstop, Luke Appling, agreed to act as coach and adviser as well as to continue his long career as an active player. He has been out of action recently because of an injured left hand.

The change of managers raised the question of why Appling didn't get the top job.

"We didn't hire him (as manager) because it would be unfair to him," Lane said. "He hasn't had any managerial experience."

Corriden, in his long string of baseball jobs, managed Des Moines in the Western League in 1923 and 1924 and Indianapolis in the American Association in 1930 and 1931.

Navy Loses To Army In Track

Annapolis, Md., May 27 (AP).—One stadium and two meet records wilted before Army speedsters today as the Cadets won their fourth straight track and field meet from Navy under a roasting sun, 85½ to 44½.

Jim Thompson led a West Point sweep of the two-mile grind in 9 minutes 25.7 seconds to set a new track and meet standard.

Outrunning fellow Cadet Dic Shea in the last lap, Thompson clipped 3.1 seconds from the old Thompson Stadium mark achieved by Former midshipmen Ward Hardman in 1932.

The Cadets' mile relay team of Ed White, Bill Vandenberg, Doug Wainer and Al Conway finished in 3 minutes 20 seconds to shave four-tenths of a second from the old inter-academy record set by another Army quartet two years ago.

Outside the realm of records, the Midshipmen put forth the individual stars.

One was Charlie Andrews, 20-year-old third classman from Baltimore, who bagged 11 points to lead all others. Andrews won the 220-yard dash in 22.4 seconds and the broad jump with a leap of 23 feet 7¼ inches. He finished third in the 100-yard sprint.

Oberholtzer rivaled Andrews' performance. The 22-year-old Indianapolis, Ind., senior spun the quarter-mile in 49.5 seconds and the half-mile in 1 minute 56.5 seconds.

The Cadets romped to six firsts on the track and three in field competition. The high jump was split both ways, when Navy's Raun Rasmussen and Army's John Kulpa failed above six feet.

SHOT-PUT—1, Bretzke (Army), 49 feet 3 inches; 2, Gay (Navy), 46 feet 9½ inches; 3, Shira (Army), 46 feet 8 inches.

ONE-MILE RUN—1, Shea (Army); 2, Wilson (Army); 3, Green (Navy). Time, 4:21.2.

JAVELIN—1, Allison (Navy), 205 feet; 2, Helland (Navy), 201 feet; 3, Novak (Army), 200 feet 6 inches.

880-YARD RUN—1, Oberholtzer (Navy); 2, Parkins (Army); 3, Space (Navy). Time, 1:56.5.

220-YARD DASH—1, Andrews (Navy); 2, Tandler (Army); 3, Mastaglio (Army). Time 0:22.4.

2-MILE RUN—1, Thompson (Army); 2, Shea (Army); 3, Lewandowski (Army). Time, 9:25.7 (new track record).

220-YARD LOW HURDLES—1, Johnson (Army); 2, Shultz (Army); 3, Pramann (Navy). Time, 0:24.9.

DISCUS—1, Green (Army), 137 feet 5¼ inches; 2, Davis (Navy), 136 feet 10¾ inches; 3, Eisenhart (Army), 136 feet 9¾ inches.

POLE VAULT—1, Bastar (Army), 13 feet 6 inches; 2, tie among Hardy and Morelli (Navy), Eisenhart and Post (Army), 13 feet.

HIGH JUMP—1, Tie between Rasmussen (Navy) and Kulpa (Army), 6 feet; 3, tie between Akerson (Navy) and Inman (Army), 5 feet 10 inches.

BROAD JUMP—1, Andrews (Navy), 23 feet 7¼ inches; 2, Scott (Army), 23 feet 6½ inches; 3, Rapp (Army), 23 feet 2 inches.

MILE RELAY—1, Army (White, Vandenberg, Wainer, Conway); 2, Navy (Holland, Eckert, Sagerholm, Oberholtzer). Time, 3:20 (new meet record).

Navy Trounces Army Golfers

Annapolis, Md., May 27 (AP).—Navy, as usual, trounced Army's golf team today, winning five of the seven matches.

Neyer defeated and tied but once by the Cadets, the Midshipmen won their eleventh links decision in the service series without a loss until the next-to-last twosome completed the 6,205-yard, par 71 Naval Academy course.

The triumph was the sixth in eight dual matches for Navy's eastern intercollegiate champions. It was Army's fifth defeat in six engagements.

Summaries—Williams, Navy, defeated Bradon, 4 and 3; Sullivan, Navy, defeated Rose, 4 and 3; Fontaine, Navy, defeated Allen, 6 and 4; Wiseman, Navy, defeated Bates, 5 and 4; Hart, Navy, defeated Szymczyk, 6 and 5; Walters, Army, defeated Baggett, 2 and 1; Gard, Army, defeated Inman, 3 and 2.

Coss Upsets Talkin in D.C. Tennis

By Jules Loh

A new crop of local talent provided the early round upsets yesterday as the City of Washington tennis tournament got under way at the Edgemoor Country Club with a record 128-player draw.

Seventeen-year-old Tim Cross scored the most surprising reversal of the day with a first round 6-4, 6-0 win over Al Talkin, and then upset Doyle Royal, 6-1, 9-7, in the second round.

One of the best tennis prospects in the area, 6 foot 4, 17-year-old, John Myers, displayed a powerful serve in downing his older opponent, Richard Bennett, 6-3, 6-0.

Little Donald Dell, a 12-year-old, pulled another upset in edging George Buck, more than 20 years his senior, 6-4, 5-7, 7-5.

In the Ladies' division, Washington may possibly have a new champion in Virginia Lee Boyer, who moved here from Boston and is ranked 15th nationally. Miss Boyer downed Margaret Graham, 6-1, 6-1, in the first round.

Snead Shoots 66 to Take 5-Stroke Lead in Colonial

For AAU Title

Virginia U. Dethrones Quantico

Lynchburg, Va., May 27 (AP).—The University of Virginia track team dethroned the Quantico Marines as senior amateur track champions of Virginia and Norfolk Sports Club ran away with junior division honors in the Virginia AAU annual track and field championship meet here this afternoon.

All past records held firm in the senior division, but five marks went by the wayside in junior competition.

Last year's champion Marine squad was a poor runner-up to the Cavaliers in today's meet. Virginia scored 72½ points to 37 for the Marines. Other squads in order of their finish were VMI 15, VPI 13, Bridgewater College 10, Washington and Lee University 8, Norfolk Sports Club 6½, University of Richmond 6, Lynchburg College 4, Woodberry Forest 3.

Junior Division Scoring

Final tally in the junior division gave the Norfolk Sports Club 44, VPI freshmen 25 1/3, E. C. Glass High School 16, Hampton High School 10 1/3, University of Virginia Freshmen 10 1/3, VMI Freshmen 10, Blacksburg High School 8, Highland Springs High School 7½, Spottswood Athletic Club 4, University of Richmond Freshmen 4, Lane High School of Charlottesville 3, Poquoson High School 1.

Sam Lucas of Blacksburg High School threw the discus 133 feet 8½ inches to set the first new mark. The old record was 128 feet ½ inch. William J. Sawyer, jr., of the Norfolk Sports Club, trimmed three-tenths of a second from the old mark of 4:31.4 in the mile run, and Bill Langford of Hampton High School surpassed the old high-jump record of 5 feet 11 inches with a leap of 6 feet ¼ inch.

Herman Gatling became another record holder from the Norfolk Sports Club when he posted a time of 25.6 seconds in the low hurdles, climaxing the old mark of 26 seconds, and Jack Sandford, a star of the John Marshall High School team of Richmond, running unattached, lowered the time for the half-mile run by eight-tenths of a second. He went the distance in 2:02.5.

Virginia Misses Vault Mark

Virginia tried hard to break a senior record in the pole vault. When George Brasfield and Bob Roller outvaulted other opponents at 12 feet 6 inches, they ordered the bars raised to 13 feet 2 inches. Both flunked on the try for record.

Two storms brewed almost together as the meet came to an end. One sent rain pelting on runners in the senior relay. The other preceded it among meet officials and coaches. Several Quantico Marine runners, entered in the relays, suffered minor injuries earlier in the meet.

When Quantico asked that they be allowed to substitute, at least one of the other teams in the field of four objected. The substitution ruling was finally waived and Quantico was allowed to take part.

Porky Oliver Has 70-209 For Second

Fort Worth, Tex., May 27 (AP).—Sam Snead's putter was smoking hot today and he celebrated his thirty-eighth birthday with a four-under-par 66 and a long-lead at the three-quarters mark in the $15,000 Colonial national invitation golf tournament.

The White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., top man of professional golf, turned his second 66 round of the tourney and made his 54-hole total 204—five strokes better than Ed (Porky) Oliver, the links' round man from Seattle, Wash. Oliver puffed in with a par 70 and a total of 209 for second place.

Snead finished to find a gallery of 7,500 on the eighteenth green where Lacy Boggess, president of Colonial Country Club, presented him with a birthday cake.

Oh, How Nice

"We knew you were comin' so we baked a cake," entoned Boggess. Then Jimmie Demaret of Ojai, Calif., golf's fashion plate, led the crowd in singing "Happy Birthday."

Snead admitted that he was 38. "That is a fact," he drawled. "I ain't like Demaret, whose going back with his years alla time."

The tournament record books show Snead to be 37 but he says that's wrong.

It was a day of par-smashing over the par 35-35—70, 7,035-yard Colonial Country Club course as the sun shone and the greens were lightning fast.

Snead turned the first nine in 32—just one stroke over the course record set in the 1941 National Open by Henry Hansom of St. Andrews, Ill. It was one of two 32s shot today. Henry Picard of Cleveland, O., did it in laying down a round of 68 that pushed him to 214 and a tie with Norman Von Nida of Sydney, Australia, for seventh place.

Six Better Par

Par was bettered six times on the course today. Others taking regulation figures apart were E. J. Harrison, the old Arkansas traveler from St. Andrews, Ill., who shot a 68 to forge into a tie for third place with Skip Alexander of Knoxville, Tenn., at 210; Charles Coe of Oklahoma City, the National amateur champion—only amateur in the tournament's 35-man field—who did 69; Lawson Little of Monterrey, Calif., who had a 69; Ben Hogan of Hershey, Pa., who had a 68 and pushed into a tie for fifth place with Cary Middlecoff of Ormond Beach, Fla., each with 212, and Picard.

Stranahan Wins British Amateur Cup

St. Andrews, Scotland, May 27 (AP).—Frank Stranahan's "mechanical man" stroking pounded fast-tiring Dick Chapman into submission to win the All-American final of the British amateur golf championship today, 8 and 6.

Stranahan led at lunch time by three holes and opened up in the afternoon to win five out of 12 and end the match on the thirtieth green—most lopsided margin in 16 years.

Stranahan wins, 8 and 6.

This was the second British amateur title for the young Toledo millionaire, who won in a downpour at Sandwich, England, in 1948.

The crestfallen Chapman, making his fifth futile bid for the British cup, became the first man to be runnerup twice without winning the title.

But this wasn't Dick's day. From the time he pulled his drive into a bunker and pitched out short on the second hole in the morning, Chapman was on the defensive.

Frankie Never Wavers

None of his shots was working. Stranahan outdrove him consistently by up to 40 yards. Dick's few approaches that weren't short refused to bite the pavement-hard greens and rolled on through for difficult putts. His putter was rarely his friend. He lost five holes by missing putts of 5 feet or less.

Chapman's only chance was for Stranahan to fold, but Frankie never wavered. He lost the first and last holes of the morning round with momentary putting lapses, but in both cases he evened matters on the very next green.

The final produced neither good golf nor good weather. Stranahan took 40 strokes to cover the first nine holes to 41 for Chapman. On the next 9 Frank used 37 and Dick 39 for medal rounds of 80 and 77, respectively.

Wind, Cold Rain Mar Play

The lunch break didn't improve their scores. Chapman needed a 42 to get through the first nine in the afternoon and Stranahan took a 38. For the 30 holes, Stranahan was six over par, Chapman 14 over.

With seven rounds of golf behind them since Monday, both men moved at snail's pace over the humpbacked fairways. It took them 3 hours and 46 minutes to play the first 18 holes.

Wake Forest Beats Terps For Title, 15-4

Greensboro, N. C., May 27 (AP). Wake Forest's Demon Deacons slashed their way to the Southern Conference baseball championship here tonight, defeating the University of Maryland, 15-4.

Wake Forest automatically qualified for the N. C. A. A. district three tournament at Kannapolis, N. C., beginning June 8.

The N. C. A. A. committee meets here tomorrow. Maryland is expected to get the other bid from this section while Alabama and Kentucky are expected to be chosen from the Southeastern Conference area.

Maryland defeated Clemson, 3-2, this afternoon to gain the finals against Wake Forest, which eliminated V. P. I.

Braves Give Raise To Sam Jethroe

Boston, May 27 (AP).—The Boston Braves said today they have given rookie centerfielder Sam Jethroe a raise in pay "for a job well done."

Neither the terms of Jethroe's old contract nor what he will be getting under his new one were divulged. Jathroe is the only Braves regular hitting .300 or better with a mark of .301.

Hoyas' Mitchell Third in Hurdles

Georgetown's Bill Mitchell finished third in the 120-yard high hurdles in the IC4A track meet yesterday in New York. Jim Gehrdes of Penn State won the even and Horace Smith of Michigan State was second. Winner's time was :14.7.

Step Right Up, Here's a Bargain

tell ya. Little Ben went down to Sam's home course, folks, down at White Sulphur Springs, and whipped Sam by ten strokes in a 72-hole tournament. So ya see the little fellow is all right once again.

So ya say ya wanna laugh a little, folks. Well, listen to me, I'll guarantee ya the greatest belly laughs since the gal tight-rope walker lost her rope.

Into this same stupendous offer, folks, at ab-so-lutely no extra cost, ya can chuckle all ya want to at Danny Kaye, Arthur Godfrey, and Bob Hope. Yes-sir-ree, they're gonna be there and play, too. Step a little closer, folks, and let me tell ya something about this Kaye. You know him as the guy who entertained the crowned heads of Europe and the bald heads of America, but listen to me, folks, he's pretty slick with those golf sticks, too, yes-sir-ree.

And ole skee-nose Hope, folks, he's as ripe as ever.

And say, folks, here's a couple of more items I'm throwin' in for the same price—Milton Berle, ole Uncle Miltie in person. And that ain't all, no sir-ree, I's givin ya Singer Gordon MacRae, billed as the "new Crosby." At no extra cost, folks.

What's that ya asked, son? Are there any football and baseball people gonna be there? I'm glad ya asked me son, 'cause I got these, too. I got Frank Leahy, whose Notre Dame teams havn't lost a game in so long that they don't know how to spell "lose" out where he comes from. And I got Greasy Neale, coach of the Philadelphia Eagles and also the guy who made the Eagles world champs, that Quarterback Tommy Thompson, folks.

And add Charlie Justice and Harry Gilmer to that same offer, folks, yes-sir-ree, at no extra cost. George Mikan, that skyscraper who owns every scoring record in basketball, he's gonna play, too.

Don't shove, folks, don't push. We got a lot of other big-name attractions. And we got tickets for everybody. And you don't need cash, either, no sir-ree, checks or money orders will do just as good. If ya can't come down and buy your tickets, just clip that ticket blank on the sports page, folks, and mail it right in.

What's that you're askin' now, son, where's all the money goin'? It's going to help stamp out juvenile delinquency, son, it's gonna buy balls and bats and sports equipment for kids who can't buy it for themselves, son, understand?

That's it, folks, ya can't say ya want more for ya money than that.

Black Douglas Sets World Mark

New York, May 27 (AP).—Black Douglas, 2-year-old bay colt from the King Ranch, set a track and world record of 50 2/5 seconds today for 4½ furlongs at Belmont Park. It was the colt's first start.

The colt, a full brother of the stakes winner, Better Self, from the same stable, beat 18 juvenile rivals down the Widener straightaway course. The old record for a straight course, 50 4/5 seconds, was set by Algasir at Belmont in 1948 under 116 pounds, Black Douglas carried 115, including Jockey Bill Boland.

Joe Walcott Favored Today In Germany Bout

Mannheim, Germany, May 27 (AP). Jersey Joe Walcott's power-punching displays here have made the Camden, N. J., veteran a big betting favorite to whip Hein Ten Hoff, the undisputed German heavyweight champion, in their 15-rounder here tomorrow.

Germans as well as American soldiers are laying odds that the 36-year-old American who twice belted Joe Lewis off his feet will knock out the 30-year-old German.

It will be Germany's first major international boxing bout since the war began.

Louise Suggs Has Record 69 Despite Illness

Newton, Mass., May 27 (AP).—Louise Suggs of Atlanta set a women's course record despite a stomach disorder today to take the lead in the $3000 women's Eastern Open tournament at Woodland Golf Club.

Miss Suggs shot a sparkling 69, two under men's par for the testy Woodland layout. This coupled with her first round 75 gave her a total of 144, a stroke better than Patty Berg of Chicago.

Babe Didrikson Zaharias of Chicago added a 73 to her opening round 74 and wound up tied for third at 147 with 22-year-old Alice Bauer of Midland, Texas.

Betty Jameson of San Antonio, Texas, whose first round 70 gave her the lead yesterday, dropped back to fifth with a 78 today.

Glamour Gal Bettye Mims Danoff of Dallas, Texas, was only a stroke under women's par at 75. Coupled with her opening round 79, this gave her 154, good for sixth position.

The other half of the Bauer team, 16-year-old Marlene, experienced difficulty off the tee and took an 80. This gave her a two-day total of 157 and seventh spot.

Yale Wins IC4A Track Meet; Fuchs Sets Record in Shot Put

New York, May 27 (AP).—George Wade of Yale jumped favored Bill Mack of Michigan State on the final turn and won going away to set a new mile record of 4:10.3 in today's IC-4A track championships.

The slender Eli's revenge victory over the Michigan State ace followed two other record-breaking performances by Yale's "Hardware Twins," Jim Fuchs in the shot put with 57 feet 9¼ inches and Vic Frank in the discus with 171 feet.

This threesome supplied more than half of Yale's 42 points as the Ivy League school won the team title from New York University and defending champion Michigan State. NYU scored 24 and the Spartans 22 points.

NYU's mile relay team set the fourth and last record, running a torrid 3:13.7 to break the 3:15 standard set by Army in 1947.

Frank unwound his willowy form on the last throw to boost the discus record, while Fuchs' new mark of 57 feet, 9¼ inches, established in yesterday's preliminaries, stood up today.

The late Al Blozis of Georgetown set the previous discus standard of 167 feet, 4⅝ inches in 1940. Fuchs bettered his own 1949 record of 56 feet, ⅜ inches.

Indiana Wins Big 10 Track By Point With Only 3 Firsts

Evanston, Ill., May 27 (AP).—Indiana's Hoosiers, grabbing only three firsts, won 50th Big Ten outdoor track and field meet by a hair's breadth margin of one point with the second lowest score compiled in the meet's history—37 points.

The Hoosiers, paced by Charley Peters' sweep to his third straight titles in both the 100 and 220 sprints, outlasted Illinois and defending champion Minnesota who got together with 36 points for second place after an overtime running of the high jump.

Indiana clinched the meet by placing fourth in the mile relay, final event on the program. At that stage, Illinois had 35 points and Minnesota 31. But Gopher high jumper Jim Horning came through with a sparkling 6-foot 5⅞-inch winning leap for five points. The best Illinois could do was a fifth place tie between Lou Irons, 1948 champion, and Gene Decker, good for one point.

Although Wisconsin also took three firsts, including a Gehrmann-anchored mile relay victory, the Badgers finished fourth with 31 points.

Indoor champion Ohio State, whose discus champion Bill Miller was among three titleholders unseated, was fifth with 25½. Sixth was Michigan with 23 points, followed by Iowa with 14½. Purdue with 12 and Northwestern with 10.

2 'Grown-up' Teams Head City Loop Bill

Marx Jewelers and Washington Capitols, the top junior sandlot baseball powers hereabout for three years, are growing up.

This afternoon, under new sponsorship, Foggy Bottom and Silver Spring Elks, they strut their stuff as full-fledged unlimited class teams, meeting in the City League feature on the South Ellipse, 3 p. m.

Foggy Bottom, formerly Marx, won the city junior title three years running, taking the All-America Tournament championship in 1948, and finishing runnerup in '47 and '49. The Elks, known then as the Caps, were second to Marx locally last year.

Joe Branzell, very busy heading athletic activities at Georgetown Branch Boys Club, has called in American University Pitcher Bill Prohaska to help him manage Foggy Bottom.

Some of their players are John Hogan of Georgetown, Pat McDougall of Central and Arnie Tranen of Coolidge, catchers who can play the outfield too; Jim Sullivan, first baseman, Central; Dale Summerbell, second baseman, Western; Buddy Taylor, shortstop, Georgetown; Eddie Miller, third base, Coolidge; Bob Chatlin of Anacostia, Mickey Meinke of Western and Billy Smith of Roosevelt, outfield.

To handle the pitching, there are Marvin Shoemaker of Bethesda-Chevy Chase, Billy Nolan, Georgetown Prep, and Ed Harnsberger and Lou Snouffer of Western.

Mort Irwin still manages the former Caps, and his 1950 lineup looks imposing enough to beat out Foggy Bottom.

He has three-fourths of Eastern's Interhigh championship infield, First Baseman Pete Dyer, Second Baseman Pete Settle and Third Baseman Harry Kallas. For shortstop, there is Dick Harris, son of the Nats manager; Jeff Jackson of McKinley Tech, and Mickey Heard of Maryland Park.

Ralph Sita of Eastern, Paul Weinstein and Dale Larsen of Western, Bob Lake of Coolidge and Bob Mayberry of Falls Church comprise the outfield with Don Hall of Wilson and Bob Evans of Western behind the plate.

Wilson's Ev Eynon, George Washington U.'s George Sengstack, Western's Pete Cerrick and Stuyvesant's Hugh Waln are the pitching standbys.

Both teams average less than 17 years old, youngest to play in unlimited ball in many a year. In fact, most of the boys are young enough to be within junior league limits, so Foggy Bottom and Silver Spring Elks will also compete in the weekday junior league which opens June 5.

Winship, Nina Rose Place, Show

By Walter Haight
Post Reporter

Pimlico, May 27.—Family, named for the Walter Crismers of Baltimore County, who made a pet of the filly and called her "a member of the family," turned in her second stakes victory of her career here today.

The daughter of Stepenfetchit out of Time Her, a once popular Charles Town mare, won by two lengths in the $5000 added Pimlico breeders' stakes before a closing day crowd of 14,220.

Mrs. C. E. Nelson's Winship was second in the test for Maryland foaled 2-year-olds, followed by Dorothy's Miss and Nina Rose, third and fourth, respectively.

Family, capably handled by Jockey Jimmy Lynch, went to the front at the break and drew out a two-length lead. However, Direct Time and Winship were going along in good style.

Approaching the stretch, Direct Time made a bid and took a head lead. But Family was far from through. The chestnut miss rallied under Lynch's handling, ran Direct Time into defeat and then, under a good drive, staved off the final bid of Winship. Both Dorothey's Miss and Nina Rose closed gamely but they were battling only for the show position.

The victory was worth $3757.50 to Owner Crismer who also was rewarded as the breeder of the filly. Family is the first and only winner to carry the Crismer colors although the Maryland owner-breeder has been in the racing game only in a modest way.

Family Is a "Homer"

Family's only other success—she failed four times—was in the Havre de Grace Breeders' stakes, proving she may not be a champion elsewhere but she is at home in Maryland, particularly against thoroughbreds of her own sex.

Backers of the 3-and-12 combination received a pay-off of $105.80 on the last daily double of the meeting.

M. Mac Schwebel's Lucky John was the winner of the initial event and proved the first winner of the career of Apprentice Jack Abatemarco. The youngster booted the 4-year-old home a length and a quarter in advance of Mrs. R. H.; Heighe's Creel with H. E. Ortell's Scotch Plains taking third money in the last jump from H. Y.-Way Stable's Bayer. Lucky John paid $19.40 for win mutuel ticket.

Brookfield Farms' Imprint won the second race by what appeared to be a decisive margin. However the judges called for a photo. Thorncliff Farm's Red Ring and Mrs. Janon J. Fisher, jr.'s, Catamaran filled out the money bracket. In addition to completing the "double," Imprint returned an $8.40 win price while under the handling of Jockey R. J. Martin, who starts a 10-day suspension on Monday.

COMING THROUGH THE PACK—This isn't a stampede, folks, but merely the tightly bunched field making its way around Tatterham Corner in the English Derby yesterday at Epsom Downs. Prince Simon, the American owned half-brother of Hill Prince and favorite, is leading at this stage, but Galcador (arrow) came through the pack to win by a nose

2 Tigers Picked For Lacrosse

Princeton's great lacrosse team, loser only to Johns Hopkins, intercollegiate champion, by an 8-7 score, has provided the first two selections for the Northern squad which will play the South's best seniors in the ninth annual North-South classic in Byrd Stadium at the University of Maryland Friday night, June 9, at 8 o'clock.

Sam Hill, attackman from Baltimore, and Pete Erdman, 1949 all-America defense choice from New Jersey, are the first stars of the game to be announced for either squad, each of which will contain 22 outstanding performers picked from 35 colleges.

Other choices will be announced from day to day until the squads are completed.

Tom Dent of Dartmouth is head coach of the Northern team while Ferris Thomson of Penn is the mentor of the South's squad. All of the players will report at College Park, June 6, to tune up for the game.

Parkside Grill Wins

Parkside Grill defeated Haynes Lithograph, 10-7, in a D. C. Recreation Department Softball League game yesterday at West Potomac.

Bill Bennings Says

Dear Folks at Delaware:

R. L. (Peg) Hanna had been refused a trainer's license in Maryland. Hanna has been in trouble several times through his handling of horses. However, despite his reputation as being cruel to thoroughbreds, I saw Hanna risk his life to save a horse and the crowd from injury one day at Cumberland. A loose horse came through the stretch and made several attempts to jump the inside fence where the fans were banked thick. Hanna darted across the track, grabbed the horse's loose rein, was dragged some 20 yards before bringing the horse to a stop. The horse was Bowe's Bond's Pencader. Hanna's last trouble came in Chicago in 1948. Apprentice John Dickey, who rides for Guy Bedwell, has been suspended for three days by the Pimlico stewards for crowding the field in a race on the Friday program. See you on the rail—Bill.

Stanlee, Rocca Meet for $10,000 Here on June 14

The biggest wrestling match ever held locally was closed out yesterday when Mr. America—Gene "The Body" Stanlee—formally agreed to meet Antonino "Argentina" Rocca for a $10,000 purse at Griffith Stadium June 14.

The Rocca-Stanlee contest will feature a huge outdoor show two weeks from next Wednesday night and the winner will receive $6000 and the loser $4000.

Figuring in the show may be some of the performers from this Wednesday night's card at Turner's Arena which features Primo Carnera against Slim Zimbelman, 333-pound hillbilly from Tennessee. Also appearing Wednesday will be Lord Carlton, the English Nobleman, against Ivan Kamaroff.

Next Move Wins in Oaks

New York, May 27 (AP).—Alfred G. Vanderbilt's Next Move won the $62,600 Coaching Club American Oaks for 3-year-old fillies today before a crowd of 36,396 at Belmont Park.

Hal Price Headley's Aegina was second, a length behind, with Ogden Phipps' Busanda third in the field of eight starters.

The winner was clocked in a sparkling 2:15 4-5 seconds for the mile and 3-furlong route, with Jockey Eric Guerin up. While not a track record, it was a full second faster than the race has been run. Next Move, in winning her first victory in seven outings this year, returned $4.60, $3.40 and $2.70. Aegina paid $21.30 and $9.40 and Busanda, $4.90.

This was the thirty-fourth running of the Oaks, and the first time a Vanderbilt horse has taken the big filly prize which will go far toward determining the 1950 championship in the division.

The track record of 2:14 1-5 was made by Man o' War in 1920.

Area Coaches Invited to Clinic

High school coaches in Maryland and Washington were invited yesterday to come to the University of Maryland next month for some tips on their profession.

Athletic Director and Football Coach Jim Tatum announced a clinic for June 19-21 on football, baseball, basketball, track and training.

The visiting coaches will be presented the ideas of two of the foremost split T-formation mentors in the country—Tatum and Don Faurot of Missouri.

English Derby Won By Galcador

Epsom Downs, England, May 27 (AP).—Galcador, a French 100-to-9 shot, outran the favored American-bred Prince Simon in the stretch today and won the famed Epsom Downs Derby to the surprise of King George, Queen Elizabeth and some 500,000 other spectators.

The victory margin was by a mere head with Double Eclipse, a 40-to-1 stablemate of Prince Simon, four lengths further back in third place. Twenty-five 3-year-old colts started.

Prince Simon, 2-to,1 favorite, was 2½ lengths in front as the huge field turned into the uphill home stretch. Then Galcador, running for Marcel Boussac of Paris, came shooting out of the pack to collar the Prince 220 yards from home.

A hundred yards from the finish Jockey Rae Johnstone got Galcador's nose in front and kept it there.

Woodward's Eleventh Try

Thus New York Banker William Woodward's eleventh try to win the famed derby was frustrated again. Woodward listened in New York to the race, won but once in its 172 runnings by an American-bred horse.

As usual, he had company in his misery. Gordon Richards, Great Britain's champion jockey, failed for the twenty-fifth time to win the Derby, only major British flat race he never has captured. Richards, up on Napoleon Bonaparte this time, said only, "Well, thre's always next year."

Harry Carr, the King's jockey, was up on Prince Simon, born and bred in Kentucky, by the same sire as Hill Prince of Preakness fame. Carr said: "There are no hard luck stories. He had every chance."

Crosby, Other Stars Watch

In the stands were Bing Crosby, Rita Hayworth, Dorothy Lamour and Irene Dunne.

Some of the event's popularity stems from the fact that the track is on public land and no admission can be charged.

Galcador traveled the mile and a half in 2:36 4-5, three seconds off the record, on a track that rated no better than dull. It was the richest derby of them all, with the winner netting $47,629.

CYO Father-Son Golf Today

The second annual CYO Father-Son Golf Tournament will be held today at Georgetown Prep, Frank Emmet and Pete Haley, tournament directors announced yesterday.

Competition will be in two classes, boys 13 and under and boys 15 and under and their fathers. The meet starts at noon, and play will be Handicap Scotch Foursomes.

Wilson, Gardner Advance in 4-Ball

Brownell And Bogart Eliminated

By Dave Heller
Post Reporter

Defending champions Jim Wilson of Army-Navy, and Jim Gardner of Washington, advanced to the semifinals of Belle Haven's Invitational Four Ball Golf Tournament yesterday with two impressive victories.

They removed what was supposed to have been their strongest opposition in the first round when they eliminated Ralph Bogart, Maryland State champion, and Bobby Brownell, District amateur champion, both from Chevy Chase, 2 and 1.

In the second round, Doug Jackson of Indian Spring, and Keith Kallio, public links ace, threw a scare into the pair, leading them 3 up at the end of the first nine. Wilson and Gardner rallied, however, to win 1 up.

Medalists Jerry Hart of Indian Spring and Bob Morris of Prince Georges, lost 1 up in 19 holes to Commander Frank Heyer, Belle Haven champion, and Col. Ben Schriever of Belle Haven, in another key second round match.

Mike Jankowski of Prince Georges, winner of the Kenwood Invitational, and his partner, Bob Chandler, also of Prince Georges, eliminated highly heralded visitors Ashby Briggs of Hampton Roads and Wynsol Spencer, finalist at Pinehurst's Amateur a few weeks ago, by a 3 and 2 margin.

CHAMPIONSHIP FLIGHT

Second round—Jerry Hart (Indian Spring) and Bob Morris (Prince Georges) lost to Frank Heyer (Belle Haven) and Ben Schriever (Belle Haven), 1 up in 19 holes; Mike Jankowski (Prince Georges) and Bob Chandler (Prince Georges) beat Ashby Briggs (Hampton) and Wyn Spencer (Newport News), 3 and 3; Edgie Johnson (Prince Georges) and Jim Gipe (Prince Georges) beat Harold Hair (Washington) and Jim McCabe (Washington), 5 and 4; Jim Wilson (Army-Navy) and Jim Gardner (Washington) beat Doug Jackson (Indian Spring) and Keith Kallio (East Potomac), 1 up.

First round—Jerry Hart (Indian Spring) and Bob Morris (Prince Georges) beat Harold Cross (Cricket Club) and K. Hanlon (Fairfax), 2 and 1; Frank Heyer (Belle Haven) and Ben Schriever (Belle Haven) beat T. Kurtz (Army-Navy) and T. Wellings (Army-Navy), 3 and 2; Mike Jankowski (Prince Georges) and Bob Chandler (Prince Georges) beat Frank Wooley (Belle Haven) and Henry Webb (Washington), 1 up in 19 holes; Ashby Briggs (Hampton) and Wyn Spencer (Newport News) beat Earl Skinker (Indian Spring) and Bill Shaw (Bethesda), 1 up in 21 holes.

Edgie Johnson (Prince Georges) and Jim Gipe (Prince Georges) beat Tony Popolaski (Bethesda) and E. Roell (Bethesda), 2 and 1; Harold Hair (Washington) and Jim McCabe (Washington) beat Carl Snook (Frederick) and Bob Harrington (Frederick), 5 and 3; Doug Jackson (Indian Spring) and Keith Kallio (East Potomac) beat Aubrey Evans (Fairfax) and Ozelle Gantt (Fairfax), 3 and 1; Jim Wilson (Army-Navy) and Jim Gardner (Washington) beat Ralph Bogart (Chevy Chase) and Bobby Brownell (Chevy Chase), 2 and 1.

Woodmont Ponds To Be Nurseries For State's Fish

The State of Maryland's Fish and Game Commission is going to get some official help from Woodmont's new golf course.

Lee Freudberg, chairman of the building committee, said yesterday that the club's new layout has six large ponds on it containing seven acres of water.

"We offered to let the State of Maryland use them as a fish nursery and the offer has been accepted," he said. "In exchange for the use of the ponds, the State has said the Woodmont members can fish from one of the ponds, containing three acres of water, near hole No. 13."

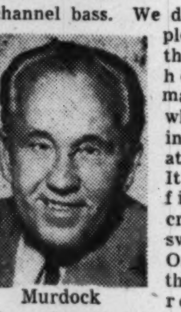
Murdock Seeks Channel Bass at Nags Head But Comes Back With Bluefish Instead

By Ralph Murdock

JUST THREE weeks ago, Herb Goodman and yours truly dashed down to Nags Head in quest of channel bass. We drew a complete blank on the bronze hefties but made up for it when we got into the blues at the inlet. It was our first 1950 crack at the swifties. At Oregon Inlet the old-timers readily informed us that the early run of blues was of larger size than usual. Some of the commercial fishermen even predicted a bang-up season for the bluefish.



Murdock

At the present time the blues have gotten up as far as Messick, Va., and Chincoteague, Va. Good quantities have been taken in the latter spot in gill nets and a few strays have also been found in pound nets just below Point Lookout. All in all, it can't be long—we hope.

ROCK FISHING in the upper Chesapeake Bay has increased in leaps and bounds and an up-to-date report reveals that Capt. Doyle Kendall at Deale, Md., had two parties during the week who landed 73 and 61 stripers, respectively. Anglers, that isn't bad fishing—in fact, that's excellent fishing. So far, practically all of the striper catches have been through the trolling process but these two were made via that chumming method with grass shrimp.

HERE ARE the anglers who nabbed the 61 rock—Albert A. Warner, 3106 Parkway Terrace dr. se.; Olen M. Beal, 635 Alabama ave. se.; William F. Drechsler, 4798 Huron ave. se., and Jesse Estep, 4909 Porter st. se. The catch of 73 stripers was made by Alton L. Malone, 4120 Southern ave. se., and party. When fish are plentiful 1½ gallons of shrimp will do the trick. The current price on live shrimp is $4 per gallon.

SHAD FISHING at Queen Anne Bridge is still good but is being sadly nelected by the local anglers since the hardheads and rock have shown up in other areas. So says Carl Argent, sr., at the Largo Sport Store. The anglers who have stuck by the hickories in the upper Patuxent have been well rewarded for their efforts. Even the muddy waters have done little to stop the shad from hitting.

ANOTHER TYPE of angling which has hit a new high has been night fishing for rockfish. One of the hot spots is the South River Bridge where grass shrimp and minnows are attracted by the lights at each end of the bridge. Bloodworm is the type of bait best suited for this type of angling. Fishing is not permitted on the bridge proper but you can fish at both ends on the banks.

VERNON PALMER, of McLean, Va., snared 16 big hardheads about 2 miles below Benedict. This catch is the "top" recent report from this area. Vernon's luck was achieved from a rowboat which he procured from Captain Messick at Benedict. The bait—frozen shrimp.

BARNEY BARNETT, proprietor of the Knotty Pine Food Shop at Deale, Md., is rendering a service which has been sorely needed in the past. Instead of making useless trips to upper Chesapeake Bay only to find high winds and unfishable waters, we suggest that you call West River 6123. An up to the minute report on wind velocity, tide changes and weather conditions will be yours for the asking. When in doubt, call Barney.

All-Marine Rifle, Pistol Matches At Quantico June 1

Quantico, Va., May 27.—Marine shooters from all over the world will compete in the All-Marine rifle and pistol matches to be held here June 1-16. Lieut. Col. Walter R. Walsh, USMCR of Arlington, Va., has been appointed executive officer of the matches.

Keenest competition is expected in the shooting for the Lauchheimer Trophy, presented to the participant with the highest aggregate score of both rifle and pistol

Two of the biggest threats for the Lauchheimer Trophy are defending champion Warrant Officer Mark W. Billing of Detroit and Master Sgt. Thomas R. Mitchell of Lubbock, Tex.

Grimes Hurls Bats 4-3 Win

Dick Grimes, hurler for Police Boys Club No. 11 senior baseball team, struck out 21 No. 4 batsmen, pitched two-hit ball, and topped his performance off by hitting a home run in the tenth inning to win the game for No. 11, 4-3.

In the other senior game, played on the North Elipse, No. 5 Club nosed out No. 10, 6-5, with Bobby Taylor hurling three-hit ball for the victors. In the junior games, No. 10 trounced No. 5, 8-4; and No. 4 edged No. 11, 20-14 in a real slugfest.

Geologist Traces Billion Years in District; We Had Plenty of Rocks—But No Inhabitants

Washington's past 150 years may be all-important to Sesqui-Centennial planners; to a local geologist that isn't even a good sprinkling of topsoil.

Miss Carr

The earth scientist, Martha S. Carr, of the United States Geological Survey, has literally picked her way through local history's span of a billion years.

Her findings are published in "The District of Columbia, Its Rocks and Their Geologic History," just off the Government printing presses.

Washington's oldest inhabitants, she reports, are its pre-Cambrian granites. They are the rocks formed on this then lifeless earth with the gradual cooling of earth's original molten mass.

No record is preserved of geologic events in the District during some 365 million years.

Mrs. Carr places life in her District's history at a mere 100 million years ago, during early Cretaceous time. Animal life of the epoch she records included fresh-water mollusks, turtles, crocodiles and huge dinosaurs.

The District's plant life of the period included ferns, sequoia, water-lily and grapes. Fossil remains from later deposits include mollusks, shark teeth, and leaves of the oak, elm, sumac, holly and blueberry.

It was along about the end of the Ice Age, when the lower terraces were being formed, that man may have first appeared in North America. But no record of early man has been discovered within the District.

"Whether the District of Columbia may be covered again by water in the millions of years to come, the reader is free to conjecture. We do know, however, that the rains and winds are continually at work, slowly wearing away the higher land masses and forming new lands in the low regions, and also that great earth movements are still taking place, just as they did in the geologic past," the report notes.

Today's geographic high point in the District, the geologist records, is about 420 feet, on the so-called Lafayette Plateau just north of Tenleytown at Reno Reservoir. The lowlands, of course, extend down to sea level along the river flats.

Mrs. Carr offers an encouraging note for persons fearful of earthquakes. Though the District's land formations reveal many faults, the displacement of rocks along one side of a fracture in their layers, all are old and none show any indication of recent activity.

The faulting, in the geologic past, was doubtless attended by earthquakes, but today the District, along with the eastern part of United States "is believed to be relatively stable," she reported.

For those who are interested in getting the full report, its illustrations and packet of maps, the report can be purchased for $1.25 from the Superintendent of Documents, Government Printing Office, Washington 25, D. C.

Its author is a native of Troy, N. Y., and graduate of Russell Sage College. She studied at Vassar and at George Washington University here, and began work with the United States Geological Survey in September 1918.

She is the wife of William Arthur Carr, a retired Postoffice Department inspector. They live at the Argonne Apartments, 16th st. and Columbia rd. nw.

Citizens Corps Awards Given 25 Members

More than 200 persons turned out yesterday for the first annual May festival of the Junior Police and Citizens Corps at Banneker Playground.

Citations were presented by Shirley Johnson, Howard University student and corps president, to 25 boys and girls selected by their comrades for outstanding community service. Those honored led activities in units of the corps, helping put on plays, boxing matches and relay teams.

A silver cup was awarded to the cadet corps of the Garrison Elementary School for the best drill. Five elementary school corps competed under the direction of Col. Robert Burke of the Howard Universiyt ROTC.

Miss Johnson, a member for seven years, said the program will be held each year to honor corps leaders. The organization was established in 1942 by Police Pvt. Oliver A. Cowan to break down juvenile delniquency. It now has units throughout the community.

Postlude

Songs of Old Heard Here In Recital

By Paul Hume

At least once a year Washington is sure to hear a song recital of music by American composers.

Yesterday afternoon this outstanding event, which should come round more often than annually, was sung in the lecture hall of the National Gallery of Art. It was the fourth concert in the current Seventh Festival of American Music.

American composers, from Revolutionary times have been busy writing songs. We could well afford to hear more. In his program yesterday Harold Ronk, baritone, listed 20 composers, with a Gershwin encore making 21.

No Nineteenth Century Music

Five groups divided the music into songs of the Revolutionary period, contemporary works, folk songs, and pieces from the early years of this century. This division, with two sections for contemporary music, omits, unwisely, songs of the nineteenth century.

Men and women such as MacDowell, Chadwick, Horatio Parker, Arthur Foote, Charles Ives and Mrs. H. A. Beach belong on such a recital.

It was true, also, that the songs from the early years of our century—songs by Rogers, Carpenter, Homer, and Horsman—were recalled later in the first group of contemporary works. For there was not sufficient differentiation in mood and styles between the two to know that one had crossed a quarter century of progress.

Ronk is gifted with natural enunciation that carries most of his words with ease. In moments of dramatic stress, they tend to become indistinct. Thus at climatic points in "General Booth Enters Into Heaven," crucial lines were missed. This poem should have been sung in Charles Ives' style, beside which Homer's obvious cliches seem feeble.

Attractive Tone

In his middle voice Ronk has a warm, attractive tone. Top tones do not come out most of the time, and lack of resonance in lower notes robs them of carrying power.

Thus he fared best in folk songs and the simplicity and natural elegance of the Revolutionary music. His soft singing in a Hopkinson song, "Beneath a Weeping Willow," was touching. It made Niles' arrangement of "Jesus, Rest Your Head" one of the finest things of the day.

Only in the last group of genuinely fine songs by his accompanists, Theodore Schaefer, Ned Rorem, and Theodore Chanler, did the music escape a growing mood of romantic harmony. But we missed samples of current art by Diamond, Nordoff, Barber, Duke, Finney, Palmer, Dello Joio, or others of recent writing.

Methodist Gain Reported Here

The Gashington Episcopal area of the Methodist Church had a church school membership of 275,-217 in 1949.

This was revealed in the annual statistical report of the Department of General Church Work of the Methodist General Board of Education.

The Washington area includes the Baltimore, central Pennsylvania Peninsula and Puerto Rico provisional annual conferences, with Bishop Charles W. Flint, Washington, as resident bishop.

Membership was the third largest total reported by any of the six Episcopal areas of the denomination's northeastern jurisdiction.

The gain for the Washington area last year was 8977, second largest increase in the jurisdiction.

For the nation Methodist church school membership was 5,799,823 for 1949, a gain of more than a million in the last five years.

London, May 27 (U.P.)—Rita Hayworth and husband Prince Aly Khan observed their first wedding anniversary today with solemn assurances that Rita isn't expecting a baby and they aren't thinking of divorce.

Press Club Outing Set For June 17

The National Press Club will hold a "Roundup and Barbecue" program—complete to a war dance by 30 Indians employed in the Government—at old Fort Hunt, Va., June 17.

The war dance will be led, the club announced, by Chief Thunderbolt Left-Hand, a member of the Crow tribe.

Also announced by Fred W. Perkins, the club's outing committee chairman, are an exhibition of trick roping by Diana Sandefer, this year's Texas nominee for Cherry Blossom Queen; Joseph Chiang, Washington correspondent for several Chinese newspapers, who will defend himself against the combined attack of two Marines at ju jitsu, and a program of cowboy ballads by the National Press Club chorus, appropriately garbed for the occasion.

While Capital scribes and their guests munch cuts of steer meat prepared by Texas Jack Snider, Amarillo's "King of the Barbecue," the open-air setting five miles south of Alexandria, on the Mount Vernon Parkway, will be occupied by a continuous procession of other events.

Curtain-raiser will be Lieut. Comdr. Charles Brendler's direction of a half-hour Navy Band concert starting at 1 p. m. over a nation-wide radio network. Wearied of congressional oratory, the Washington newsmen have restricted speechmaking to a single encounter in which Senator Tom Connally (D., Tex.) thunderously "points with pride," while Representative Clarence J. Brown (R., Ohio) fiercely "views with alarm." Vice President Alben Barkley will serve as impartial umpire.

Uniformed contingents of the Kentucky Colonels, Texas Navy, Nebraska Admirals, and the "Foreign Legion" (embassy press attaches) will stage a competitive drill as a prelude to a further display of rivalry when members of the Capitol press galleries try to out do solons of the House and Senate at baseball and horse riding.

Citizens Fete Street Cleaners

It was Street Cleaners Day yesterday in Georgetown.

For the fourth year in a row a party sponsored by the Progressive Citizens Association of Georgetown was held for the city employes who clean the streets in that area. The home of Mrs. Frank West, 3406 R st. nw., was the scene.

The men—11 of them this year—were asked in to receive gifts from the community and have lunch.

Said Mrs. West, vice chairman of the association's cleanup committee, "it's a boost to their morale. The trash and garbage collectors get their tips, but the men who clean our streets don't get anything. If everyone did this, we would have a cleaner city."

The street cleaners at yesterday's party were:

Two Arrested In 1st Precinct Numbers Raid

First Precinct police yesterday arrested two persons on numbers charges in a raid on a basement apartment at 618 Massachusetts ave. nw.

Charged with operation of a lottery and possession of numbers slips were Louis B. Lyles, 53, and Cora Johnson, 33, occupants. They were released under $1500 bond each for appearance Monday before United States Commissioner Cyril S. Lawrence, who issued the warrants.

The raid was led by Capt. Howard Covell, commanding the First Precinct.

Sanatorium Loses License

Harrisburg, Pa. May 27 (U.P.)—The State Welfare Department today announced it had revoked the license of the Belle Vista Sanatorium, where 10 mental patients died chained to concrete slabs in a fire last March 28.

WASHINGTON: SUNDAY, MAY 28, 1950

D. C. Artists Find Strange Ports in the Storm

Art Flourishes in a Good Light

By Sonia Stein

MANY an artist has wept a tear when the wrecking crew demolished an old empty building. And it was not for the destruction of a historic piece of fine architecture that he wept. It was for the ugly but wonderfully big and inexpensive rooms in it that Washington's less affluent artists used for studios.

Artists can work anywhere—anywhere that has north light and room enough to step back and get a view of the canvas. They sacrifice heat to light, considering a drafty attic room with a skylight and a pot-bellied stove a treasure far beyond a steam-heated room with a southern exposure.

But in Washington there is a shortage even of drafty old buildings — with or without pot-bellied stoves. Over a period of 10 years, as the housing shortage has become more and more acute, Washington artists have had to become more resourceful.

Art colonies, like the one that used to exist on Eye st. near 15th have been routed by the pile drivers and glass bricks of modern real estate and these artists have dispersed to other quarters. Some have converted old garages and stables, a few possess built-to-the-whim studios of their own, still others have doubled up with fellow artists.

Consider the case of Painter Carl Nyquist. When he moved into an old house at 3118 M st. nw. about 10 years ago, he had his choice of 8 or 10 houses in the neighborhood. He chose one which dates back to the early 1800s, for its good light and big rooms. For a year or so he rattled around in the place by himself, but as Washington war-boomed, he acquired company—artist friends who begged to rent studio space. Now he shares workrooms with Sculptor Maxim Elias and Painters Jack Lewis and Raymond Wardell.

The heating is spotty; stoves and small oil heaters stand in front of boarded-up fireplaces. Nyquist, who also lives in the bleak old building, looks forward to spring each year for more than aesthetic reasons. However, his tenant, Jack Lewis (one of the group of young artists whose work was shown at the Metropolitan Gallery last year) considers these working quarters luxurious. He once spent a teeth-chattering winter in a coldwater flat in New York which had no heat of any kind.

Has Its Own Tradition

THE M ST. building, however heatless, does have tradition. Reputedly occupied by shady ladies at one point in its history, the house retained an air of mystery when Nyquist moved in. One closet was nailed shut.

Friends insisted he open this door to see what it contained, so one dark and now famous night, Nyquist held a housewarming. At the witching hour, he opened the closet to let the guests peek—and shriek.

Inside was a gaunt figure—an assembly job of Civil War uniform and face mask of Voltaire. Considerate host Nyquist, opening the closet a few days before the party, found only mops and dust rags. Knowing Elsa Maxwell wouldn't approve such a dull grand opening, he rigged up an appropriate skeleton for his closet.

For genuine tradition, however, Sculptor Felix de Weldon's studio is outstanding. Estimated at something over 150 years old, it is a huge structure built by an early American artist with bricks imported from Scotland. Massive wooden beams run the length and breadth of the studio—a chilly hall measuring 60x40 feet with a ceiling 48 feet high in the center.

And a good thing, too! This historic studio, in which Paul Wayland Bartlett created the long frieze for the pediment on the House of Representatives, now shelters the 92-ton plaster model of de Weldon's statue memorializing the raising of the flag on Iwo Jima. In what will be the largest bronze free-standing group ever made, the Marines stand 32 feet tall.

Peeking out from behind are the head of a Civil War general, and the original model for the bust of bewigged Judge Blackstone, years of plaster dust settled on his curls. These are cherished relics of Bartlett and his generation.

Truman Is on Hand

These plaster creatures, and the flesh ones who work in the ivy-covered studio at 219 Randolph pl. ne., are both kept warm by two iron stoves from England which date back to 1861. The artists' technique in keeping warm is to think about the stoves once in a while and keep busy with the hammer and chisel. The only roaring fire they've ever had there was an accidental one in an adjoining stable on New Year's Eve, 1947.

Poking around in some charred papers left by this blaze, de Weidon came across some documents that dated back to the 1700's. Included was a letter from Francis Scott Key and one from George Washington to Architect Samuel Galloway.

Italian-born Andrea Pietro Zerega, has three studios in a way. He has one at Catholic University where he teaches, one on M st., where he also teaches, and another—an enchanting private haven in a converted stable adjoining 1311 29th st. nw. Mr. Zerega found this studio by driving around with a real estate man until he spotted a bleak barn one cold January day. "That place has possibilities," he announced. "You'll freeze," said the real estate man. But Mr. Zerega took it. "Now, in May, everybody sees its possibilities."

Yellow roses from a neighbor's garden climb onto his balcony. "They sneak over and I can't send them back," he explains. From his balcony he has several gardens to give him inspiration, including the lovely one belonging to Drew Pearson.

Inside there's the old stove for warmth, and Zerega's own work for beauty. While the nose may detect the faintest suggestion of stable, the eye sees only the artist at work. One side of the room is a permanent still life—a Jacobean table on which rests one bright red leather book, a candlestick and an opened book on architecture.

Occasionally Zerega turns a page, for variety. A pinky-red and white polka-dot length of material is carefully folded over the corner of a screen, dramatically dominated by a black and white check panel.

And hanging from the ceiling is a wooden egg. "Ah, such a wonderful thing. It is so good and so wonderful and so silent!" says Zerega. "Wouldn't it be wonderful for the people of the world to wake up one of these days and see on the front page a big whole egg shape in all its true values?" he asks. "What a relief it may prove to be to so many people who through the philosophy of worldly charlatans have become rather confused and most cheerless," he suggests.

Glamour Studios

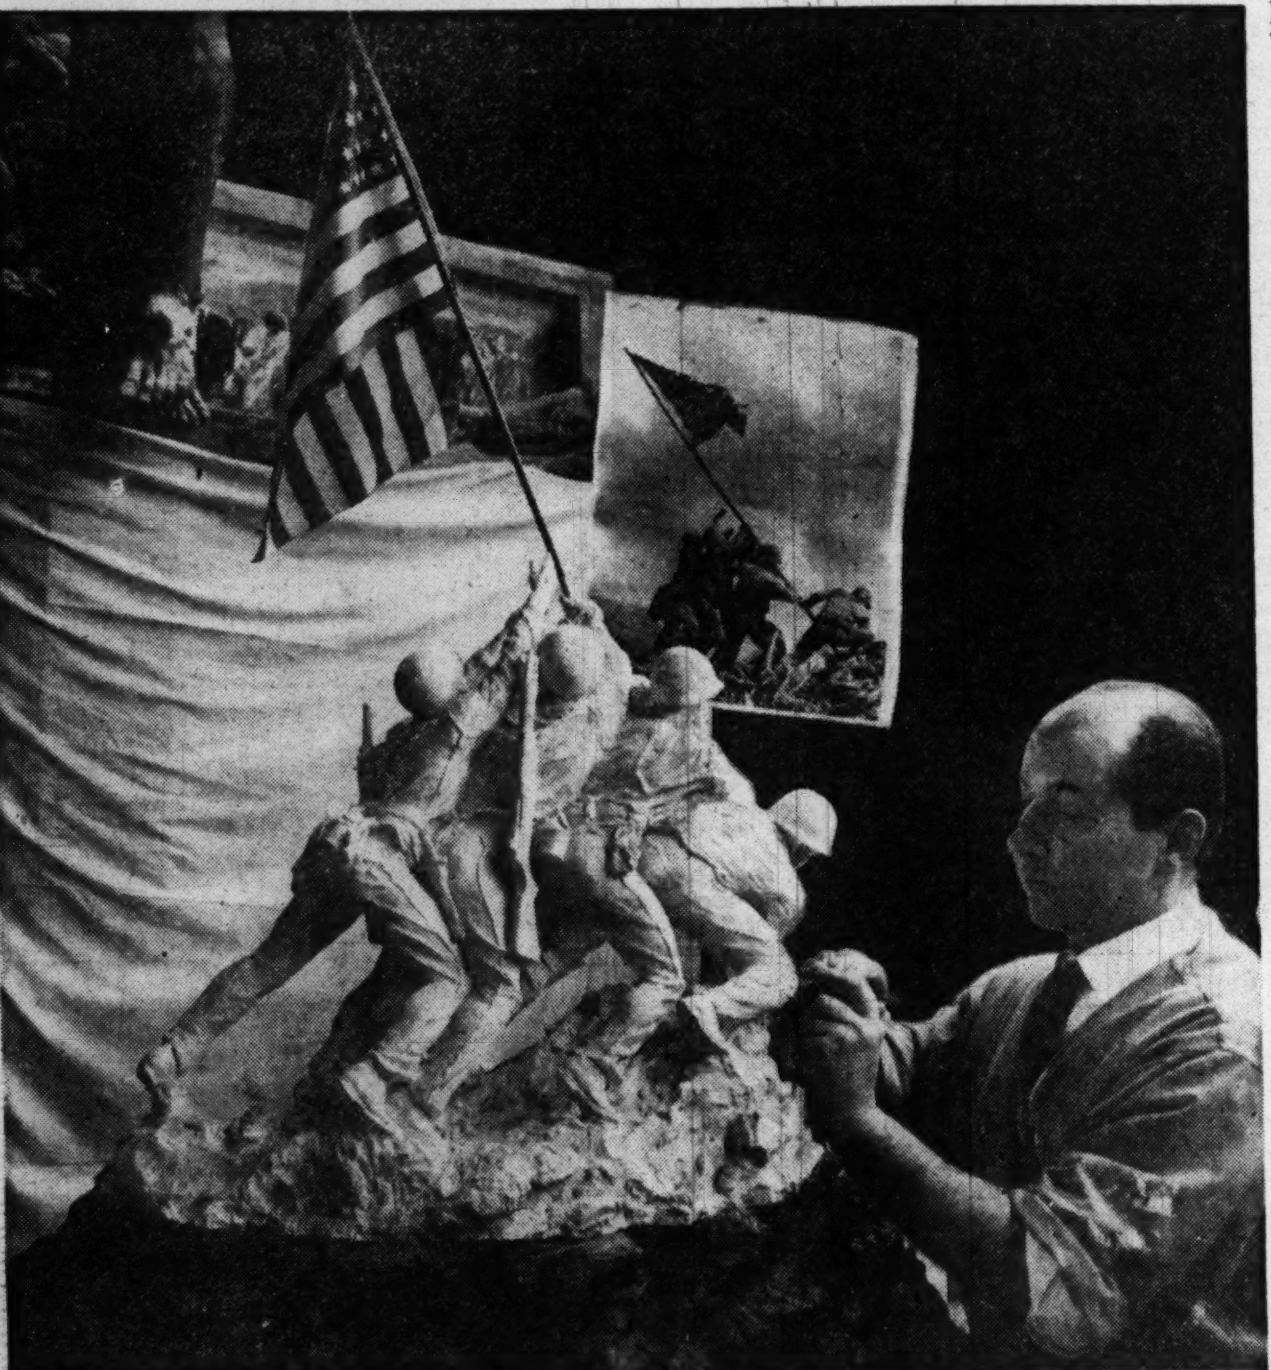
TWO of the glamour studios are those used by Marcella Comes Winslow and Alice Decker Sommers. Mrs. Winslow, who is chairman of the art section of the June 8 National Society of Arts and Letters scholarship fund benefit, to which all the artists pictured here are contributing work, paints in eighteenth century splendor. High above a Georgetown garden on the fourth floor of the J. Noel Macy house at 3339 N st. nw., Mrs. Winslow works by the light of a picture window that measures 5 feet by almost 10 feet. It's a garret, but thoroughly glamourized.

The studio was put in, complete with special ceiling lights for exhibitions, by its previous owners, Mr. and Mrs. Dubois Wack. When the Macys bought the house, they didn't want the beautiful studio to go to waste (not with the shortage of studios in town), and asked Mrs. Winslow to use it. These very practical patrons of the arts gave Mrs. Winslow the key to the house—a long hinged one at that, to fit in the early eighteenth century lock which still graces the historic house.

Her Studio Overlooks Potomac

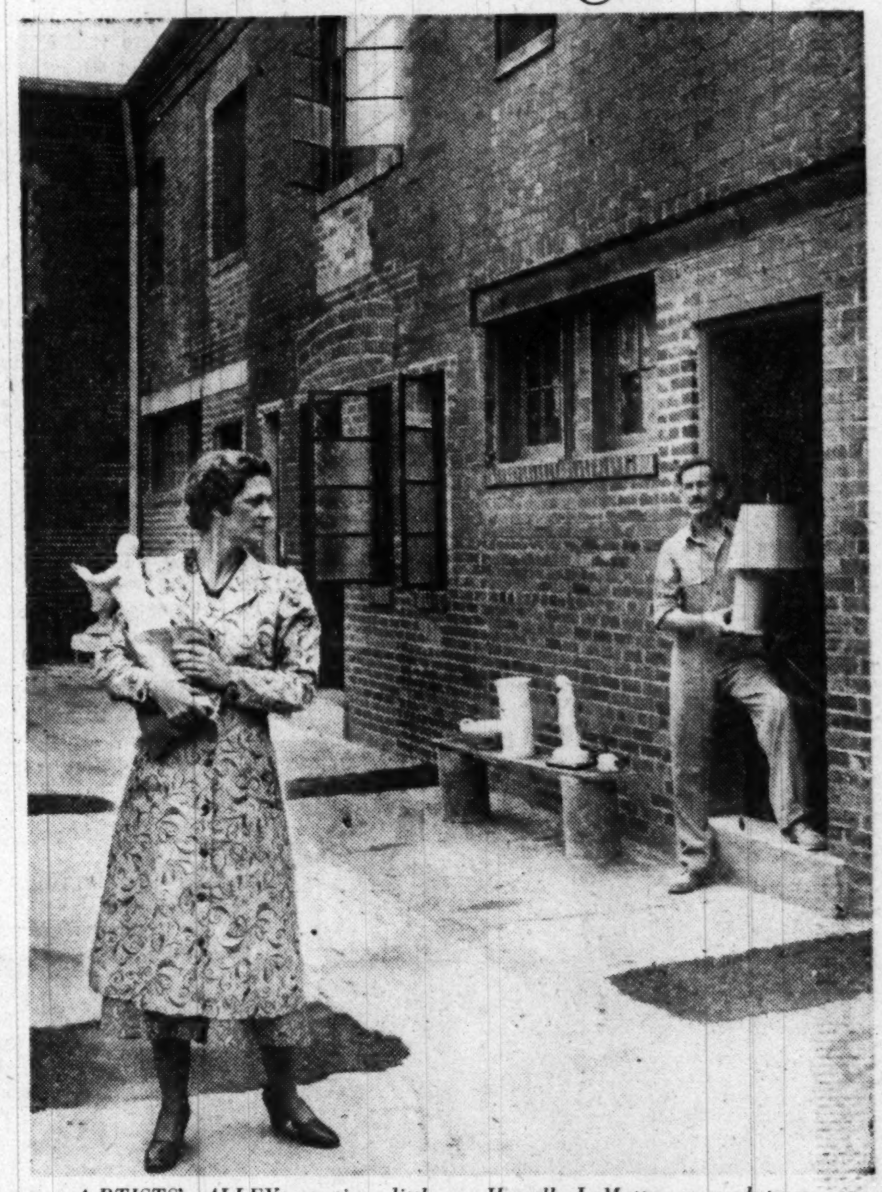
MRS. SOMMERS, who lives in a house at 3620 Prospect st. nw., is a mother as well as a sculptor, so she had Architect Theodore W. Dominick design a studio to fit at the foot of her garden overlooking the Potomac, where she could keep an eye on her family. Since she likes to work out-of-doors as much as she can, the studio has an overhead garage door for one wall, which Mrs. Sommers uses as a shield from direct glare when the door is open, and for both light and privacy when it is closed, since it's of "obscure" glass.

Further information about the scholarship benefit to be held June 8 by the Washington Chapter of the National Society of Arts and Letters, at which the artists pictured here will be exhibitors, will be found on Page 2, column 6.



U. S. Marine Corps Photo

SCULPTOR Felix de Weldon, working on a small scale model of the gigantic statute of the flag-raising on Iwo Jima which will be placed on Memorial hwy., creates in a studio that is well over 100 years old. Built of imported Scottish brick and heated by two ancient English stoves the huge studio has always been occupied by artists. Present owner is Mrs. Paul Bartlett, widow of the sculptor who made the frieze for the pediment of the House of Representatives. Bartlett's original plaster model, heavy with dust, now hangs behind the massive 32-foot high Iwo Jima group



ARTISTS' ALLEY, a tiny little group of garages off 33d st. nw., between O and P, houses a group of Washington artists. Here Mrs. L. Howell LaMotte, a sculptress, exchanges greetings with her next-door neighbor, Charles Arrott. Homeless artists search similar alleys

ARTIST Andrea Zerega went hunting with a real estate man, found a bleak and dreary stable on which he built a balcony. It is now covered with yellow roses which belong to a neighbor's garden. "They sneaked over; I couldn't send them back." The stable is dramatically furnished with a Jacobean table on which rests a single red leather box, a book on art and a candle stick. An "egg" hangs on a string from the ceiling, and a pattern of polka dots and linoleum squares is the basic decor

Photos by Harris & Ewing

TINY Bernice Cross, another of the Washington artists pictured on this page who will be contributing work to the National Society of Arts and Letters scholarship benefit to be held June 8 at the Shoreham, now works at a studio on Florida ave. which the Phillips Gallery owns. But she and her artist husband, James McLaughlin, who is also connected with the Phillips Gallery, are building a studio in Virginia—"quiet, modern architecture"—stone by stone. Artists need plenty of space, Miss Cross explains

Harris & Ewing

SCULPTRESS Alice Decker has a studio at the foot of her garden overlooking the Potomac River. Built to her specifications, the sleek, modern building is a far cry from the traditional dusty old garret of the legendary artist. The fat little bear that Miss Decker holds, is one of two garden pieces she will contribute to the National Society of Arts and Letters benefit June 8, from which funds will be raised to send Washington students to music and art schools

THE glamour studio of the lot, Mrs. Marcella Comes Winslow's workroom, is on the fourth floor of the historic Georgetown residence of Mr. and Mrs. J. Noel Macy at 3339 N st. nw. The required north light streams in from a fabulous picture window. William Walton, a Georgetown neighbor whose water colors will be in the National Society of Arts and Letters benefit show, admires Mrs. Winslow's "Magnolia." He works at home, in a small studio which is entered through the third-floor bathroom

Mrs. Vandenberg to Entertain

A luncheon will be given in honor of new officers and committee chairmen of the Air Force Officers' Wives' Club by Mrs. Hoyt S. Vandenberg, wife of the Chief of Staff, United States Air Force, at her Fort Myer quarters on May 31 at 12 noon. Mrs. Vandenberg is honorary president of the club.

Following the luncheon, the new executive board will hold its first meeting. Mrs. Charles Wesley Schott, president, will preside.

Among those who will serve on the executive board for the next year are: Mrs. Lauris Norstad, Mrs. Merrill D. Burnside, Mrs. William G. Booth, Mrs. Edward W. Wigman, Mrs. William J. Lookadoo, Mrs. Manuel J. Asensio, Mrs. Thomas S. Ryan, Mrs. Milford F. Itz, Mrs. George B. Green, Mrs. Clifford A. Sheldon, Mrs. Dale D. Brannon, Mrs. Harry Beresford, Mrs. Bryant L. Boatner, Mrs. Harry G. Armstrong, Mrs. James R. Andersen, Mrs. Joseph Smith, Mrs. Aubry L. Moore, Mrs. C. Pratt Brown and Mrs. Maurice S. Dillingham.

Activities of the club will resume in September.

Spring Luncheon Planned by Wives Of Supply Corps

The Navy Supply Corps Wives will have their annual spring luncheon at Fort Leslie J. McNair, Tuesday, June 13, at 12:30. Officers will be elected and plans made for future projects. Nonelective officers who will continue next year are Mrs. Charles W. Fox, president, and Mrs. George W. Bauernschmidt, vice president.

The retiring officers are Mrs. James B. Dietz, executive chairman; Mrs. Graham Bonnell, secretary; Mrs. Charles F. Palmer, treasurer; and Mrs. Willard C. Johnson, membership chairman.

Live Now in Washington

Mr. and Mrs. William Brent Lake have made their home in Washington following their wedding trip. They were married April 8 at the Presbyterian Church, Catonsville, Md. The bride is the former Miss Mary Rose Adams of Lenoir City, Tenn. Mr. Lake's parents are Mr. and Mrs. George Brent Lake of Bethesda, Md.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Bachelor Friend of Her Late Husband Pays Raffish Attentions to Widow, Who Wonders If They Can Sustain Honorable Companionship

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am a widow, 43, and have two married sons. My husband died almost 10 years ago and as we were very close to each other I was nearly prostrated by grief.

My sons were in school, then in the Army, so to pull myself together I got a job in the business world and worked as a nurse's aid in my spare hours. My job has turned into a fine position with a big salary and quite a bit of responsibility.

For three years a bachelor friend of my husband's made mild efforts to go out with me, but I could think of no one but my husband until two years ago, when I consented to play golf with Ray. We dated occasionally for the next year and I can truthfully say I had many happy hours with him. We have similar tastes and it seems we are utterly content in each other's company.

Once Renounced, He's Back

However, some months ago I felt I was being subtly maneuvered into a love affair with no suggestion of marriage between us. I am not sure I would want to marry him, but I am certain that I will never have an affair with him or with any man. Thus I felt it was better for us not to see each other, and we haven't gone out together for almost a year. But my work brings me in occasional contact with him and now he wants to resume dating.

He is re-selling himself, indirectly, by means of a sport we both intensely enjoy. Is it humanly possible to go out with a man you like and keep him for a friend and not a lover? My guess is that he will never marry anyone. What complicates the situation is that my sons and their wives are so fond of him, and he seems just as fond of them. In every letter they inquire if I've seen Ray, and always his first question is, how are they?

My husband and I tried to teach the boys to be self reliant and they both chose fine wives whom I adore. We are a family who accept or ignore the faults of those we love, so they think Ray's friendship is just what I need. He may not make me happy, but at least I am not as unhappy as I was, they say. Ray is the only beau I've had, as he is the only man who has been persistent enough to get a date. Am I being abnormal or unnatural in my treatment of the situation?

L. D.

Fears Herself More Than Man

DEAR L. D.: What you are saying, it seems to me, is that you aren't sure you can abide by your scruples and control your behavior, if you continue to go out with Ray, and he continues to indicate willingness to have an affair. Which means that your problem is you, not him or his interest in you, whatever its import may be.

It appears that Ray is not a ruffian who would forcibly violate your principles. At worst he is only a perennial bachelor accustomed to mooching for love without marriage, I gather. Thus if your personality were deeply at peace with your declared purpose never to have an affair with him, or with any man, you'd have nothing to fear from friendship with him, even supposing his wily intent is to wear down your resistance to unhallowed intimacy.

When you renounced Ray's companionship a year ago, theoretically to block his designs on you, actually you were in flight from erotic thoughts, conflicted impulses and emotional hungers in yourself. And to really pull yourself together into confident management of your behavior in relation to him, you've got to get acquainted with the composition of your fears,—because self understanding is the basis of successful self government.

Solitary Routine Fuels Morbidity

For lack of social variety, you tend to think too much and too morbidly of Ray, who probably couldn't hold your attention at all, in comparison to men of your late husband's type, if any such should cross your path and proffer good companionship. You are losing perspective on people, due to being too solitary, and I advise you to get out with Ray as much as possible, chiefly to make new contacts and enlarge your list of acquaintances, which is necessary groundwork for forming new friendships selectively.

However, to maintain your integrity in relation to him, while reorienting yourself to the world of the living, you should enlist first-hand psychological help in bringing your emotional conflicts to conscious mind,—and thus rob them of compulsive driving power.

Mothers' Memory Club To Honor President

Mrs. Lee Price Calfee, retiring national president of the National Mothers Memory Club, is to be honored at a luncheon on June 8 at 12:30 p. m., at Tilden Gardens Dining Room, 3000 Tilden st. nw.

Mrs. Frank P. Litschert is chairman of the luncheon committee, assisted by Mrs. Meyer L. Shoenthal, Mrs. Richard H. Akers, Mrs. Joseph N. Todd and Mrs. Thomas B. Gardner.

Mrs. Roy F. Knox, the newly elected national president, will preside at the luncheon table.

June Convention Set

Navy Mothers Club May Bring 1000 Delegates Here

Navy Mothers Club of America will celebrate the twentieth anniversary of its founding at its fourteenth national convention June 19 through 23 at the Mayflower Hotel here, in connection with the District of Columbia's Sesquicentennial celebration. Around 1000 delegates and visitors are expected to attend the five-day convention program from 526 clubs located in 47 States.

Hostess Club will be Washington, D. C., Navy Mothers Club No. 597, with the Maryland and Virginia clubs as cohostesses.

Mrs. Charles Peterson of Philadelphia, is national commander of the Navy Mothers Clubs of America. The organization's founder, Mrs. Emma Jones, who chartered and incorporated the first Navy Mothers Club in McAllen, Tex., in 1930, is expected to attend. Mrs. Louis M. Sheers of Falls Church, Va., is commander of the Washington Club and general chairman of the convention.

Pilgrimage to Arlington Cemetery will take place at 9:30 a. m., on June 21. A plaque will be presented in commemoration of the Unknown Soldier, and a wreath will be laid on the tomb. The banquet will take place at 7:30 that evening with the Maryland clubs as hostesses and Mrs. Amelia A. Cilento, chairman.

Registration will begin at 9 a. m. on Monday, June 19 at the Mayflower and continue throughout the day. Mrs. Ruth G. Meggs is registration chairman. The formal opening and reception at 7:30 p. m. will be followed by a ladies' minstrel show staged by Philadelphia Club No. 73.

The opening business session is scheduled at 9 a. m. June 20. At 12:30 p. m. the commander's luncheon will be sponsored by the Virginia Clubs, with Mrs. J. C. Leslie of Roanoke Club No. 94 as chairman. A business session in the afternoon will be followed by memorial services at 8 p. m. with Mrs. Martha McAllister of Wheeling, W. Va., Club No. 86 as chairman.

On June 22 the program will include the business session and election of officers from 9 a. m. until 4:30 p. m.; installation of officers at 8 p. m., followed by an exhibition by the Pueblo, Colo., drill team of Navy Mothers. The convention will conclude with a business session on June 23 from 9 a. m. until 1 p. m.

Chairmen include Mrs. R. A. Crump, Mrs. George Schmelz, Mrs. Wyman Chadwick, Mrs. William N. Meggs and Mrs. Gertrude Harris.

Chaplains will include Rear Admiral S. W. Salisbury, Chief of Chaplains; Capt. Paul G. Linsweaver of the Potomac River Naval Command, installation; Comdr. Daniel F. Meehan, and Comdr. Harris W. Howe, for the banquet invocation.

Artists Aid Scholarship Benefit Fund

A number of prominent Washington artists are contributing work to the Washington Chapter of the National Society of Arts and Letters scholarship benefit, to be held from 2 to 6:30 p. m. June 8 at the Shoreham Hotel. A concert by young Washington musicians will be given at 3, under the supervision of Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt Whitney. Tea will be served at 4:30.

Scholarships in the fields of voice, piano, drama, ballet, literature and art will be awarded at the time of the concert.

Paintings and sculptures to be sold for the scholarship fund or given as prizes include an oil painting by Mrs. Dean Acheson, a small scale plaster model of the Iwo Jima Monument by Felix de Weldon, a gilt madonna head by Kalervo Kallio, winner of the Forrestal bust competition; watercolors by William Walton, garden figures by Alice Decker and an oil by Bernice Cross.

Tickets may be purchased from Mrs. Winifred H. Artaud, 3031 O st. nw., the Francis Scott Key Bookshop, the AAA at 17th and Pennsylvania ave, and at the Shoreham Hotel on the day of the benefit.

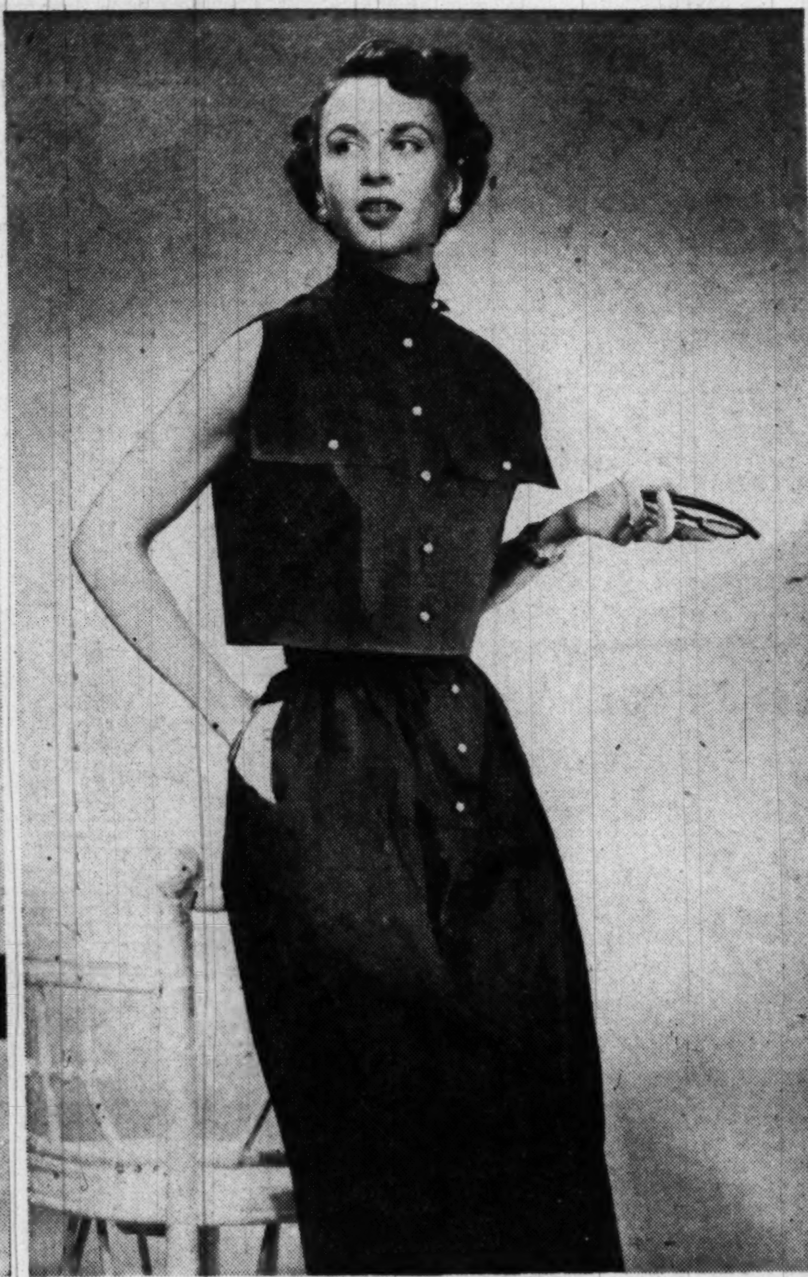
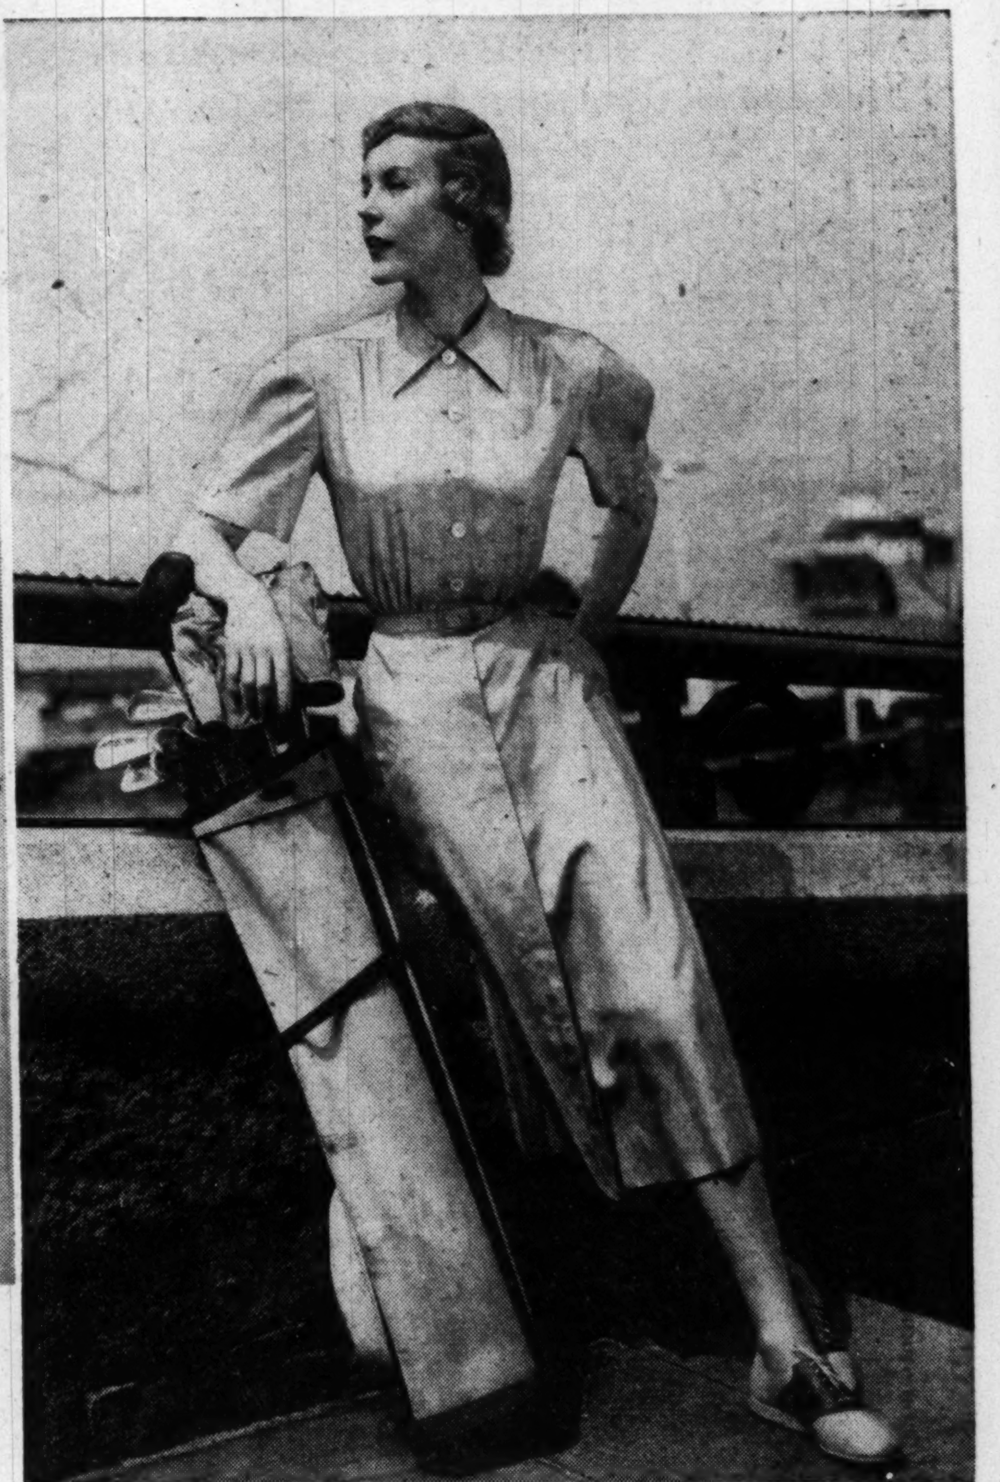
FOR trudging over sun-baked hill and dale, science comes up with a new fashion accessory. It is an "air-conditioned" stocking, that sends little waves of air along the soles of your feet as you walk. A 30-denier stocking—heavy enough for miles of walking—its sole is a panel of nylon mesh, about four and a half inches long. Available in all shops carrying Gotham Gold Stripe stockings



WHETHER you are an active golfer or interested spectator at the National Celebrities Golf Tournament, June 3 and 4, you will be smartly clad in this navy two-piece broadcloth. Designed by Claire McCardell, it has a moderately full skirt, gathered to a wide waistband, with deep-cut pockets. Sleeveless butcher-boy bolero is brightened with white pearl buttons. Available at Julius Garfinkel & Co.



CLASSIC "golfer" dress is still the best feminine fashion for the fairways. Shorts, pedal pushers, abbreviated skirts, etc., come and go on the golf courses, but the traditional, well-cut cotton sports dress refuses to relinquish its top position. Variations of this style, with action back and sleeves will be the summer's No. 1 golfing outfit

Fairway Fashions—for Celebrities, Spectators

By Peggy Preston

GOLFING togs change with the seasons, but not noticeably with the years. Like the game itself, they are on the conservative side.

Fairways fashions will be highlighted here next weekend when the fourth annual National Celebrities Golf Tournament is played at the Army-Navy Country Club. But, aside from the outfits of the top notch feminine stars, who traditionally inject a bit of color into their sports attire, we won't be apt to see any revolutionary costumes.

Classic Golfer Dress Is Alaways Good

That classic "golfer" dress you bought 10 summers ago would be as good today as it was then, had it but survived the wear and tear of repeated washings. A skirt and blouse, vintage 1938, is still top style on the links, and it is necessary only to change from cotton to wool to meet the demands of the seasons.

However, except in certain instances, there is no rule against more colorful golfing attire. Most exclusive country clubs prohibit women from wearing slacks or shorts on the golf courses. But in recent years, the younger element has been doing its best to add some individuality to the staid, traditional mode of recommended golfing dress.

There are the knee-length denim skirts, for instance, which are the delight of those with a pretty pair of pins. Wide, swirling, colorful and cute, these skirts are still modest enough to please the most exacting club officials.

Culottes are Variation Of Classic Outfit

Culottes, garments that are half trousers, half skirts, are the answer for some who wish to veer away from the usual. Weskits, striped jersies, sleeveless pullovers add a litle zip to the customary skirt and blouse combination.

The girls who reach the top ranks of the golfing fraternity are the ones to watch if you like variety in fairway fashions. Both the Bauer girls—Alice and Marlene, who will participate in the National Celebrities event, go in for novelty outfits. Shorts, combined with jersies turtle necked sweaters, knee length skirts are among their favorites.

What the famous Babe Didrikson Zaharias is going to wear when she steps up to the tee, is always a matter of speculation. While playing in the British Women's Amateur, she shocked the citizenry with her "lucky" blue corduroy slacks. But, on the other hand, she is just as apt to settle for a neat-as-a-pin sweater and skirt.

Average Woman Likes Old Reliable 'Golfer'

BUT this summer, as in the past, the most popular golf fashion with the average woman will be the old reliable "golfer." Cut with the customary action back and action sleeve, to allow for complete freedom of arm and shoulder movements, it is being turned out in a variety of versions. Skirts may be gored or pleated, it may be fastened at the side or front with buttons or zippers, the fabric may be cotton broadcloth or sheer voile, but always it is well tailored, easily laundered.

Newest twist to the "golfer" this year is given by a New York designer who has made one up in pure silk. Wheat colored, with pearl buttoned bodice, it packs beautifully, is pretty enough to double for street wear.

At The Washington Post Tournament

Linksmen Will Sport Colorful Attire

RUMOR has it that golfdom's "best dressed" Jimmy Demaret, had best look to his laurels—fashion-wise. He has a local rival, one Maj. Gen. Clark L. (Nick) Ruffner, USA.

If you're able to see for the crowd at the National Celebrities Tournament next weekend at the Army-Navy Country Club, cast your eyes in the direction of the most spectacular spot of color on the fairways. That'll be the general.

And don't think that having witnessed his ensemble once you've seen all. For the general has not one, but two complete ultra-nifty outfits, which, according to the fashion grapevine, he will wear on succeeding days.

No one, save General Ruffner himself, knows the exact color combinations. And he refuses to discuss details. Only this will he admit:

"I will NOT be wearing pink suede shoes. That's strictly Jimmy's innovation. While I'm a great admirer of his, I can't bring myself to . . ."

(Truth of this matter is, General Ruffner who is leaving shortly for an extended overseas assignment, recently restocked his "civies" wardrobe. While he was about it, he decided to indulge in his liking for color. They say it's terrific.)

Miss Kuter To Be Bride In September

Maj. Gen. Laurence Sherman Kuter, commander Military Air Transport Service, and Mrs. Kuter, announce the engagement of their daughter, Roxanne, to Robert B. Williamson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Howard H. Williamson of Bryan, Tex., and Washington. The bride-elect has chosen September 8, her parents' wedding anniversary, as her wedding date.

Miss Kuter attended the National Cathedral School, Smith College, McGill University French Summer School, and is now a senior at Goucher College. She is a member of Alpha Phi sorority, the DAR and the National Society of Arts and Letters. She made her debut in Washington in 1948.

Mr. Williamson attended Texas A. and M. College and received his B. A. degree from the University of Texas. He taught economics at North Carolina State College and is now doing graduate work toward his Master's degree in economics at George Washington University.

Silver Fox Reappears In the Fashion World

Have you seen any of the new short silver fox stoles? It's the newest fur stole fashion and, unless I miss my guess, it will be one of the most popular. Already I see a lot of smart women wearing them here in New York and they look much more spring-like than heavy mink stoles.

These little fox stoles are usually only one skin wide and are short—reaching just below the waistline. Actually the fashion started in Paris last year with black fox, and any kind of fox is pretty used this way.

If you can't buy new furs right now, it's a grand chance to get your old silver foxes out of storage and have them made into a smart little stole!

Miss Flanagan Becomes Bride Of John Joseph Slattery, jr.

The marriage of Miss Helen Marion Flanagan to John Joseph Slattery, jr., took place Saturday at Our Lady of Victory Church, with the Rev. Carl F. Hess officiating. The bride's cousin, the Rev. Michael I. Lucey, celebrated the nuptial mass which followed.

The bride is the daughter of James H. Flanagan, chairman of the D. C. Public Utilities Commission, and Mrs. Flanagan. Mr. Slattery's parents are Mr. and Mrs. John J. Slattery.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore ivory satin with a veil of imported Chantilly lace. Her flowers were lilies of the valley and white orchids.

Miss Dorothy Ann Dexter of Canton, Mass., was her cousin's maid of honor. The bridesmaids included Miss Mary Louise Flanagan, the bride's sister; Miss Eileen Birch, Miss Mary Ann Spreckelmeyer, Miss Mary Frances Bourg, Mrs. Martin B. Durkin, all of Washington, and Mrs. Joseph F. Nicholas of Milton, Mass.

Frank J. Slattery was best man for his brother. Ushers were Richard Giebel, Raymond D. Hurley, Martin B. Durkin, William A. Kane, all of Washington; Joseph F. Nicholas of Milton, Mass., and Harold M. Devlin of Annandale, Va.

Following a reception at the Mayflower Hotel, the newlyweds left for their honeymoon at Sea Island, Ga. They will live in Washington. The bride was graduated from Holy Cross Academy and Trinity College. Her husband, a veteran of three years overseas in the Army, is a student at Columbus University. He also attended Catholic University.

Afghanistan's Embassy Marks Independence Day With Party

By Marie McNair

Diplomatic and official society felicitated the Charge d'Affaires of Afghanistan and Mme. Abdul Hamid Aziz at the reception yesterday at the embassy celebrating Afghanistan's Independence Day.

The Afghanistan Ambassador and Princes Zera Naim had left two days earlier to return to their homeland where a new post will be announced for His Royal Highness Sardar Mohammad Naim.

Yesterday's host, who has been serving as Minister-Counselor of the embassy, is the brother of the first Minister to the United States, Abdol Hosayn Aziz. He is also chief delegate from his country to the United Nations.

Buffet of Native Dishes Served

For the fete day two long buffets were set out on the awninged terrace with native dishes and drinks for the guests. There was kabelei pillao—chicken and rice highly spiced, and lavan challaw which is veal and rice; sabzi challaw which calls for a young roast lamb served with rice spiced with herbs, nuts and raisins. In addition to the regular bar there were bowls of dogh—the Afghan's national drink—a smooth mixture of sour milk, cucumbers and mint.

From the Afghanistan Embassy, there were some who went around the corner to Dr. and Mrs. George Trible's house on Wyoming ave. for their party which began at 6 and ended around 9. Others went out to Albemarle street for the cocktail party given by the Assistant Air Attache of the Norwegian Embassy, Capt. Rolf Westerberg and Mme. Westerberg.

Party to Cap Celebrities Golf Tourney

You may have to be a celebrity to play in the National Celebrities Golf Tournament next Saturday, but anyone with the money can follow the game and see the Bob Hope show afterward at the Armory.

The windup fete of the day is the party to be given by Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Meyer and Mr. and Mrs. Philip Graham at the Meyer's residence at 10:30 Saturday night.

The women's committee taking care of extra details of the tournament has Mrs. J. Howard McGrath wife of the Attorney General, as its chairman, and Mrs. Tom Clark, wife of the Supreme Court Justice, as cochairman. Proceeds of the tournament and the show will go to welfare work for boys and girls to combat juvenile delinquency, under the direction of the Department of Justice.

Mrs. Louis Johnson, wife of the Secretary of Defense is on the committee, as are Cabinet wives, Mrs. Charles Brannan and Mrs. Oscar Chapman. Other members are Mrs. Stanley Reed, Mrs. Francis Matthews, Mrs. Frank Pace, Mrs. John L. Hall, whose husband, Admiral Hall, is head of the Army Forces Staff College, Naval Operating Base, Norfolk, Va.; Mrs. Clark L. Ruffner, wife of Major General Ruffner of the Office of the Chief of Staff; and Mrs. Lamar Caudle, wife of the Assistant Attorney General.

NOTE BOOK NEWS:

The Luxembourg Minister and Mme. LeGallais and their son, Norbert who's a student at Landon School, will leave Washington on June 7 and will sail the next day on the Ile de France for a summer holiday in Europe. They will visit Italy—Mme. LeGallais is Venetian—first and then go to Luxembourg.

Mrs. Clark McIlwaine has leased Lilac Cottage on Bellevue ave., Newport, for the summer and will have with her her son-in-law and daughter, the Marquess and Marchioness of Milford Haven, who were married in Washington last February. The marquess and his bride, the former Romaine Simpson, have been in New York since returning from their wedding trip in April.

Vice President Barkley hit upon an idea some years ago to which Mrs. Barkley gives full encouragement. He keeps a "gift drawer" composed of little articles which he picks up on his travels. Comes a birthday, or a wedding anniversary, shopping is no problem, he simply reaches in the drawer.

Miss Rita Pandit has joined her mother, Mme. Pandit, Ambassador of India, after finishing her studies at the University of Geneva. She's specializing in languages. Mme. Pandit met her daughter at the Idlewild Airport, returned with her to Washington.

DATE-BOOK DATA:

The Norwegian Ambassador and Mme. Munthe Morgenstierne will be hosts at dinner at the embassy tomorrow evening in honor of Mme. Pandit, Ambassador of India.

Mr. and Mrs. Eric Johnston will be hosts at dinner on Tuesday, June 6, at the 1925 F Street Club..

Mr. and Mrs. Persifor Spilsbury's dinner June 15 on the Shoreham Terrace will be Mrs. Lisle Smith's "holing-in" day. After that date nothing—absolutely nothing—could bring her into town from Spring Glade Farm, her country place near Vienna, Va.

Senator and Mrs. Burnet Maybank will be hosts at dinner Tuesday evening at home.

The Washington Post

MRS. J. HOWARD McGRATH (left) wife of the Attorney General, and Mrs. Tom Clark, wife of Justice Clark, former Attorney General, meet at Mrs. McGrath's house to discuss their part in the National Celebrities Golf Tournament to be held at the Army-Navy Country Club next Saturday and Sunday. Mrs. McGrath is chairman of the women's committee and Mrs. Clark cochairman. Proceeds of the tournament and the Bob Hope Show which will be given Saturday night will go to combat juvenile delinquency

Miss Gelly Becomes Bride

Miss Margaret Clifford Gelly was married yesterday noon to Ensign Edward Carson Waller, 3d, in a ceremony performed at the Naval Communications Station Chapel in Washington. The bride is the daughter of Capt. and Mrs. George Balfour Gelly (USCG, ret.) of Washington. The bridegroom is the son of Edward Carson Waller of Chicago and the late Mrs. Waller.

For the ceremony which was performed by the Rev. John J. Reardon, the bride wore a gown of white Chantilly lace over satin.

The bridal attendants were the bridegroom's sister, Mrs. Robert F. Taylor and the Misses Joyce Ebel, Ruth Wilson, Margaret Joyce Forbes, Victoria Brashear and Kathy Taylor. Best man for Ensign Waller was Ensign Leland R. Stegemerten.

Following the wedding reception at the Army-Navy Club, the couple left for a trip through the South. The couple will live in Pensacola, Fla., where Ensign Waller is taking flight training.

The bride attended school in Hawaii and is a graduate of Georgetown Visitation Junior College. She also attended George Washington University.

Ensign Waller is a graduate of the United States Naval Academy.

Lucille J. Adams To Become Bride At June 5 Nuptials

The Rev. Dr. and Mrs. William B. Adams of Rockville, Md., announce the engagement of their daughter, Lucille Jeannette, to Walter Frank Malmborg of DeLand, Fla.

Miss Adams is a graduate of the Stetson University at De Land, and is a member of Zeta Tau Alpha sorority.

Mr. Malmborg is a graduate student in mathematics at the University of Florida, Gainesville, and a veteran of World War II. He is a member of Pi Kappa Phi fraternity. The wedding will be solemnized on Monday evening, June 5, at the Baptist Church on Courthouse square, Rockville. The ceremony will be performed by the father of the bride-to-be, who is pastor of the church.

Card Party Slated

The Hebrew Sister's Aid Circle is sponsoring its annual card party at Stansbury Lodge Hall, Monday, at 8 p. m. Guests are asked to bring their own cards. All funds will be used for the needy Jewish families of Washington, both for emergency aid and other aid when necessary.

J. P. Leeper Will Speak

John Palmer Leeper, assistant director of the Corcoran Gallery of Art, will speak on "Planning a National Exhibition," at the University Women's Club at 8 p. m. on June 1. His talk is apropos of an exhibition in honor of the Sesquicentennial of Washington to open at the Corcoran on July 8. The exhibit will show 150 years of the history of America in painting.

There will be an informal dinner at 6:30 p. m., honoring Mr. and Mrs. Leeper. The program is presented by the Art Appreciation Group, Mrs. A. Remington Kellogg, chairman.

"Summer Weekends" will be under consideration at a roundtable discussion at 5 p. m. on May 29. Speakers will include H. Raymond Gregg, chief naturalist, National Capital Parks; Walter Curtis Imrie, director of traffic development, United States Travel Agency, and Norman R. Weiss, travel counselor, American Automobile Association. The program was arranged by Mrs. Walter DuBois Brookings. Tea will be served from 4 to 5 p. m., Mrs. Lloyd T. Cox, hostess.

Square Dance Set At Greenbelt for Benefit of School

Eb 'n' Elv, the well-known square dance callers, will provide the entertainment for an evening of square and folk dances at the Greenbelt Center School Auditorium on Friday, June 9. A five-piece band will play.

The dance, starting at 8:30, is sponsored by the Greenbelt Cooperative Nursery School as a fund-raising venture. Proceeds will be used for the nursery school.

Old-Fashioned Tub Method Best For Washing an Electric Blanket; Pat Gently, Never Wring It Out

DEAR ANNE:
Please tell me if it is possible to wash an electric blanket in an automatic washer.

If not, and it is washed by hand in the stationary tubs, is it important that it not be kept in water longer than three minutes? A. B. C., Alexandria.

Electric blankets shouldn't be washed in a machine because of the danger of damage to the wiring.

In washing a blanket in a tub, lift it up and down and swirl it around. Use a soft brush or cloth on the surface if necessary. Never wring. Confining the wetting to exactly three minutes isn't vital, but leave the blanket in only long enough to get it clean. Be sure it is thoroughly dry before putting it back into service. And be sure to use lukewarm water in both the washing and the rinsing as hot water can damage the wool in the blanket.

DEAR ANNE:
I have a blue pure silk blouse, which I washed several times with good results. Last time, I probably didn't rinse enough or didn't use the right kind of soap. Now there are white streaks and spots in it that won't come off again. What can I do about it?
Mrs. K. D., Washington.

If these distressing streaks won't wash out, it seems they must be faded places rather than a deposit of some sort. Perhaps you used a soap or detergent that was too strong when you last washed this pure silk blouse. In this case, tinting or dyeing with one of the home dyes sold by drug stores or having the blouse dyed by a cleaning firm would be the only way to solve the problem.

DEAR ANNE:
Can you give me the recipe for real Italian veal scallopini? My son had this at an Italian restaurant, and says what I make is nothing like the real thing.
Louise B. Moffett,
Arlington, Va.

This is one of those pleasant occasions when both parties to an argument are right. There are just about as many kinds of "real Italian" veal scallopini as there are Italians, for the name of the dish means nothing more or less than veal cut in thin pieces. One of D. C.'s best Italian restaurants makes 20 different varieties of this dish.

The most generally known version of scallopini is made with a tomato sauce seasoned with sherry. If you can pry loose from your son some description of the dish he liked, this department may be able to find a recipe for it; but without more exact specifications, picking one would be a shot in the dark.

DEAR ANNE:
I have become a detergent enthusiast for washing dishes and clothes, and now survey with dismay the soap scum on my washbowl and bathtub. Can you help me locate a "bar" detergent to be used in place of scum-producing toilet soaps? Or is any such product only an object of wishful thinking?
Mrs. W. G. Slagle,
Alexandria, Va.

So far, wishful thinking seems to be the word. One reason, perhaps, why bar detergents haven't been forthcoming is the tendency of these preparations to remove oils as they clean. In fact, this principle accounts for their excellent action on fabrics and dishes. But it doesn't work so well on skin. You can avoid the annoying bathtub ring by another purchase, though. Just add a softener to your water. There are many such preparations on the market, some of them pleasantly scented for bathroom use.

DEAR ANNE:
Our office force is giving a farewell party for several of our top military personnel and extending a welcome at the same time to our new officers and their wives—all Navy. I am a civil service employe. I intend to take as my guest to this party the wife of a high ranking Army officer. When I introduce my friend to the naval officers would it be proper for me to mention that she is the wife of an Army officer? If so, could I mention his rank? Mrs. S. A.

There is certainly nothing improper about mentioning your friend's connection with the military, particularly should you both find yourselves in informal conversation with one or more of the Navy officers during the course of the party. On the other hand, should the party prove to be large and formal, there would be very little point in going out of your way to introduce this information. If you do mention your friend's husband, it would seem most natural to refer to his rank indirectly, saying for instance, "Mrs. Jones is the wife of Lt. Col. Jones, who was unable to come today."

PARRY-PHRASING

When Lodge Hits Hustings, It's An All-Family Chore

By Ellen Buell Parry

"I AM GOING to help my husband this summer. We expect a tough campaign," replied Mrs. John Davis Lodge, when I asked her about their plans after Congress closes.

Vivacious, blonde Cesca Lodge proved that she was a great political asset during her husband's freshman campaign two years ago.

The Connecticut district he represents (Clare Boothe Luce's old district) has a great many Italian-Americans in it and Mrs. Lodge, born Francesca Braggiotti, grew up in Italy.

Lodge, a grandson of the late Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, is a graduate of Harvard Law School, and a former stage and movie actor to boot. But, during a speech, if he mentions his Italian wife, there is a clamor for her to come to the platform.

Not only can she speak Italian, but she can dance and sing as well. Member of a talented clan, she has been a dancer since she was 5. She also has been on the stage and in the movies.

Two daughters—Lily, 18, a student at Wellesley, and Beatrice, 10—are always eager to meet the voters, too. It's a case of the whole family running for Congress. They all agree with a grin.

BRIDGE is about the only thing that has ever thrown our Veep for a loss. The Vice President played bridge just once in his life.

The story was told at a luncheon given by Mrs. Paul Truitt and Mrs. Norman Munster on Wednesday at the Congressional Country Club, at which Mrs. Alben Barkley was the guest of honor.

One of the guests asked Mrs. Barkley if she and the Vice President played bridge. "I like a game now and then," replied Mrs. Barkley, "but he tells me he never has cared for cards."

At this point the Veep's daughter, Mrs. Max Truitt, spoke up: "He played bridge once."

She then told how she and her family decided to teach "Pop" to play. After giving him long and detailed instructions they finally dealt a hand.

"'I bid one,' said Pop, right off.

"'One' said Marion Truitt. 'One what, Pop?'

"'You mean I have to bid one of something special? Oh, this game is too intricate for me!'

"And that ended Pop's interest in bridge."

WAKENED out of a sound sleep during an afternoon siesta, Mrs. McAuliffe, wife of the famous "Aw, nuts!" Gen. Anthony C. McAuliffe, heard her maid saying, "The minister wants to speak to you on the telephone."

"The minister!" thought Mrs. Mc., as she went to the phone feeling very guilty and wondering whether the parson knew how irregular the McAuliffe family had been about church attendance recently.

"This is Perle Mesta," said the voice at the other end. "I hear you and the general are coming to Europe this summer and I want you to come by and see me in Luxembourg."

THE Vice Chief of Staff of the Army, Gen. Wade Haislip, and Mrs. Haislip, have an old and close friend visiting them at their home at Fort Myer, Mrs. Ralph (Katharine) Wooten, wife of Maj. Gen. Ralph H. Wooten (retired).

The Wootens have lived in Memphis, Tenn., for a year, but Katharine says that Washington is still home to them. They spent many years of their service life in the Capital and once they owned the house at 29th and Q sts., so well known for its two gas-lighted lamp posts which remain lighted night and day.

Katharine is going to West Point on Friday to attend the graduation ceremonies of her nephew, James Wallace, jr., of Toledo, Ohio. General Wooten will join her there, and both will return to Washington for several days on their way back to Memphis.

THE Roy St. Lewises usually close their city apartment about this time of the year and go to Rancho Mio, their farm in Maryland, for the summer.

This spring, however, Roy has delayed the move and requested his beautiful blond wife, Peggy, to stay away from the country place temporarily.

He admits that something new is being added, but what is being built is Roy's deep, dark secret.

"GET the Reds out of our country and our country out of the red" is the slogan Republican Commander Tyrrell Krum of Vienna, Va., has adopted in his campaign for Congress in the Eighth District of Virginia.

Ty has this slogan painted on the side of the ultra-modern trailer he is using both as campaign headquarters and home in his summer travels through 17 Virginia counties, meeting and speaking to voters.

A former newspaperman, Ty was until recently director of the weekly press division of the Republican National Committee.

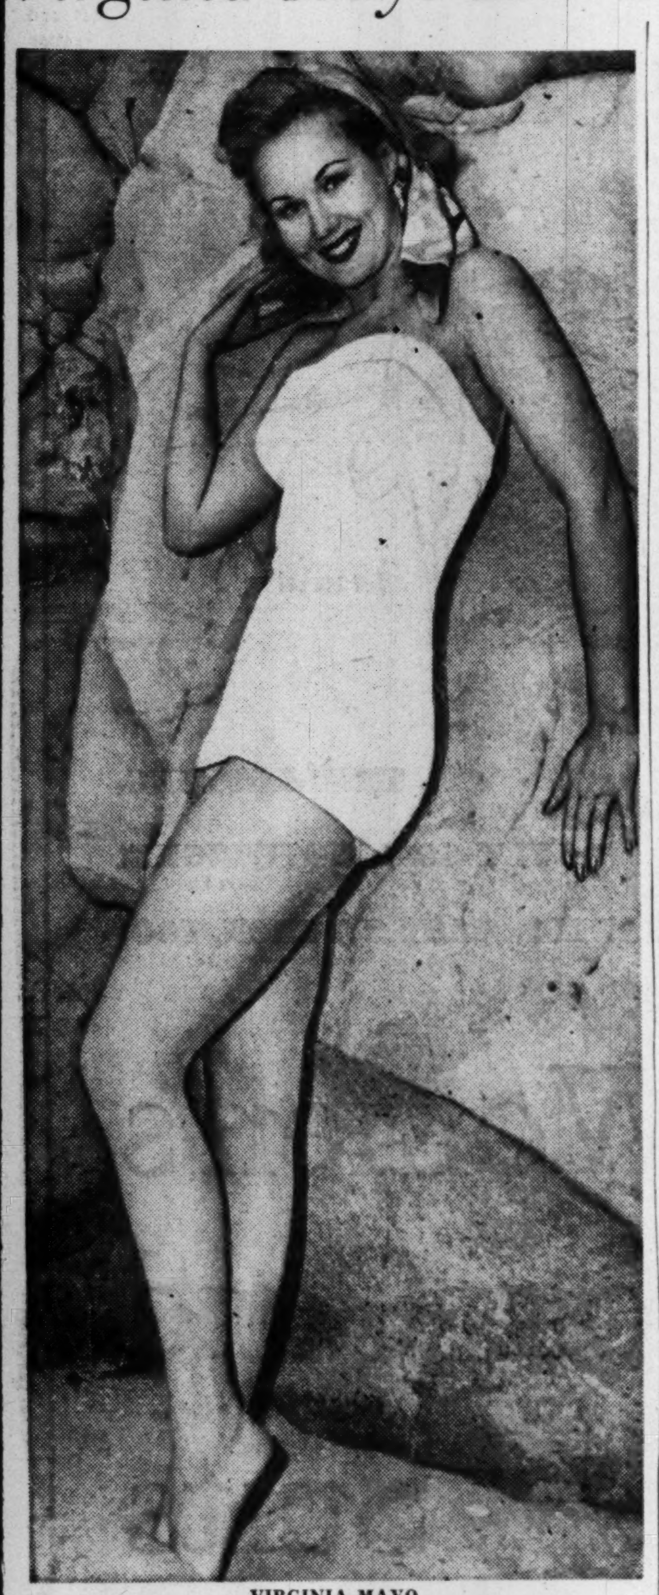
Protective Foods Add Curves

Virginia Mayo Eats Her Way to Stardom

By Ida Jean Kain



VIRGINIA MAYO
. . . added curves, zoomed to stardom

PULCHRITUDE often comes through the eye of the camera as bulkritude . . . since the camera exaggerates weight by a dozen or so pounds. To offset this illusion, many of the actresses struggle to stay as thin as skim milk . . . too thin for health.

When I interview these glamour girls who look as though they do not eat regularly, I find myself speaking right up about the protective foods—it's the dietitian in me.

That's the way it was with Virginia Mayo when I interviewed her five years ago. Virginia was a shy, slight girl, weighing a bare 112 pounds for her 5 feet 5 inches of height.

"Honey, do you drink milk?" I inquired, adding that she needed to put on 10 pounds. Well, honestly, she couldn't have looked more surprised if I had tried to borrow $10.

"Putting on weight is considered fatal in Hollywood—it's the worst thing that can happen," she told me earnestly. "The camera, you know . . ."

This young actress was so sure that adding weight would stop her in pictures, that it is interesting to note what did happen when she added curves . . . she zoomed to stardom. Not that my advice carried any weight. Happily, she fell in love and married Michael O'Shea, and when she started living a healthy, outdoor life she just naturally gained the needed curves. Virginia is now famed for her million-dollar figure.

But note—this actress has the same slim waist and perfect measurements that she had before she gained. In fact, she slimmed 1 inch off her hips! That's what dancing and outdoor exercise can do for a girl. She loves ballet and horseback riding and all outdoor sports. She looks forward to her meals and enjoys good wholesome food—including milk.

The added pounds rounded out her figure in all the right places and took away the angular look. Here are the vital statistics: height 5 feet 5 inches, weight 120 to 122 pounds, bust 34 inches, waist 24, hips 34.

Virginia is fast reaching the top of the Hollywood ladder. It can't be called sudden success—she started her dramatic training at the early age of 6—but it will be lasting. This Warner Bros. star is currently in England, filming "Captain Horatio Hornblower."

If movie producers would wake up and urge their ultra-thin stars to add a few pounds of pleasing curves, there would be less temperament in Hollywood and more health. Actresses can keep photogenic measurements through regular exercise, for well-toned muscles hug the figure and photograph streamlined.

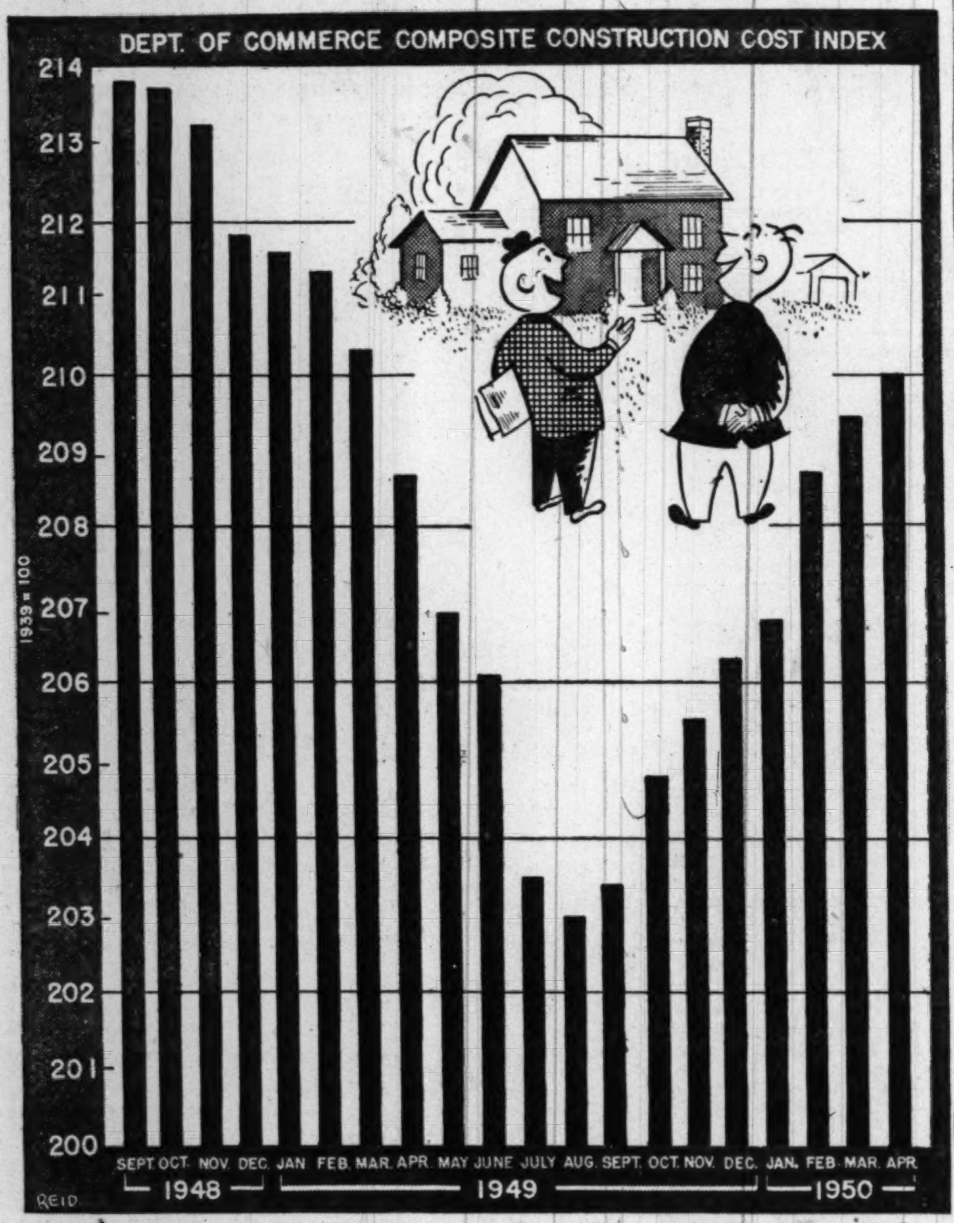
Construction Costs Rising Steadily



UP THEY GO: To get a 1939 dollar's worth of construction in September, 1948, you had to spend almost $2.14. From a low of $2.03 last August, based on the 1939 dollar, costs have crept back to about $2.10 in April, according to Commerce Department figures

By Robert P. Jordan

COSTS OF building materials—and construction costs with hem—are steadily rising in Greater Washington and through-ut the country.

Here's what Federal statistics how:

A dollar's worth of home contruction in 1939 cost just short of 2.14 in September, 1948—all-time igh. The 1939 construction dollar was buying $2.03 in August, 1949—owest point.

Last month, that dollar needed $2.10 to buy the same amount of house. Since the August low, costs have been going up steadily.

They're just now beginning to be elt. Home building this year promises to smash all records. The vast construction volume already has put some materials in short supply, such as gypsum board and ath, millwork, and certain grades of lumber, according to the National Retail Lumber Dealers Association.

And there is talk of a gray market.

Eventually, the rising costs will be passed on to the home buyer. So far, however, builders over Greater Washington in general are putting up houses at prices quoted for the past few months.

What to Do?

THE question is: "When. . . ?" And also, "What can be done?"

Clarke Daniel, president of the Home Builders Association of Metropolitan Washington, said there is "no question costs are going up."

A large-scale builder himself, Daniel gave this illustration: his firm paid $90 for a thousand feet of number two common fir last February; the organization now must pay $128 for the same amount.

The problem of rising costs, he reported, was discussed at the recent meeting here of the board of directors of the National Association of Home Builders. From that session and his own appraisal of the situation, Daniel has just come up with a three-point program.

First, builders should "slow down their starts" now—and speed up later in the year. That, he said, would "ease the strain at this moment." As it is, the tremendous volume of home building has taxed all facilities, he declared.

Next, builders and building supply dealers should cooporate in "holding the price line."

Finally, builders should not raise wages, or offer higher wages to attract craftsmen and laborers. It won't create any more mechanics," he said. "It just drives costs up."

Temporary Situation

DANIEL SAID he hopes that the present status of costs and materials is temporary. To relieve the situation, he has written all association members, urging them to hold prices down and to space out their building program.

According to one economist, housing production has outdistanced the supply of some materials for a variety of reasons. Among them are heavy public spending, refunds on veterans' insurance policies, and easy credit terms advanced by Federal housing agencies.

Builders contacted here also said that higher wages called for in the minimum wage law showed up in increasing construction costs.

The Commerce Department's construction division noted that both building costs and materials prices "are maintaining the gradual uptrend that started toward the end of last year."

The division's composite construction cost index shows that costs have crept from a low of 203 last August—based on 1939's 100—to about 210 in April.

A spokesman explained it simply: "The reason is that wages have gone up and up, and materials have gone up—so construction costs have followed."

From the National Association of Home Builders came this advice: "You'd better buy now."

Cost increases, according to Frank W. Cortright, NAHB executive vice president, have followed the tremendous volume of building with its huge demands.

"This is a matter over which the individual builder has no control," Cortright said. "Materials consti-

Best Buy Of Lifetime: Your Home

In view of rising construction costs, The Washington Post asked Oliver M. Walker, president of the Washington Real Estate Board, for his ideas on the subject. Here they are:

By Oliver M. Walker

WALKER

EVERY American family should buy a home as soon as the means are available to pay the carrying charges. The purchase of a home is usually the most important financial transaction made by the average family.

You should look and buy carefully, so that the house you select will fill the family's needs and meet living requirements.

After you find a house you desire, in a convenient neighborhood, with the space and facilities you seek, of sound design and construction, at a price which enables you to pay the monthly carrying charge, then buy it.

Everyone desires a bargain. However, sometimes the cheapest house is not the best bargain. First, you should seek comfort, convenience and adaptability to your family. These are the factors which create security, good living and happiness in home ownership.

Do not buy or incur obligations beyond your ability to pay but do not let current prices deter you from buying when you need a home. The future may bring lower prices or even higher prices. No one can accurately predict which way the economical cycle will turn.

Price fluctuations of real estate are not as important as the advantage gained in home ownership. Depreciation is a minor factor when spread over a period of years. The only danger of declining prices is a forced sale of the property due to transfer from the area or changed family conditions.

Finest Terms Ever

NEVER in the history of our country have the terms of home ownership been more favorable. Long term, low interest and full loans are available to most everyone with average income and a good credit record. If prices decline, then financial terms may change thereby, offsetting the advantage in price reduction.

Buying a home, even though the payments may be greater than

VANISHING SCENE—Across the country, hundreds of thousands of young couples like this GI and his girl have created a postwar housing demand that has brought on home building unparalleled in history. But, says the Construction Division of the Department of Commerce, the end is in sight. Home building, dropping with the marriage rate, will head back to prewar levels in 1952. Much future construction is expected to be that of replacing existing homes

Marriage Drop Will Break Home Boom

HAYNES

CONSTRUCTION of new homes over the Nation—now going on at the fastest rate in history, will begin skidding to a prewar walk in 1952.

This was the prediction yesterday of the Commerce Department's construction division. It is based on the foreseeable demand for housing, which is expected to be less than half what it is now within two years.

The reason: home builders will have chewed up the postwar housing backlog, and formation of new families by then will be around 500,000 yearly instead of the 1,400,000 of 1949.

According to John L. Haynes, chief of the construction division, the current home building boom is the result of an abnormal demand. It stems, he said, from the unusual number of households formed since the war.

To point this up, he cited special population surveys made by the Census Bureau in April, 1947, and again in April, 1949. The surveys indicated that new households were established at the rate of about 1,400,000 in each of the two years.

From 1940 to 1947, however, records show that a little over 600,000 households were created annually. The more-than-double jump in 1947-49, he said, was the result of:

1. An above-normal increase in the number of married couples, reflecting the very high postwar marriage rate. "Such as lonesome G. I.'s correcting that situation," Haynes smiled.

2. The undoubling of married couples previously living with other families.

3. Setting up of new households by single persons, or by two or more unrelated persons.

Haynes said that long-range projections of the Office of Business Economics forecast a drop in family formation to about 440,000 annually from 1950 to 1955, and to 390,000 annually in the following five years.

Why the big drop? "There won't be as many young people around," Haynes explained.

"The marriage rate was accelerated considerably after the war," he said, "using up the inventory of eligible girls and bachelors.

"On top of that, the low birthrate in the depression years causes us to have in the near future a low population of marriageable folks." The marriage rate, he added, already has begun to decline.

"During the past three years, the home building industry has provided additional dwelling units at a rate well over one million a year if we include conversions and temporary units. This rate is over twice the expected normal growth in households in 1952.

"If our home building pace is continued, the industry will catch up with deferred demand in about two years, and will then be operating on the basis of normal household growth of less than 500,000 units per year plus that replacement demand there may be," Haynes observed.

It is in the demand for replacement of existing dwellings that the Commerce Department official sees the biggest ray of hope for large-scale building activity after 1952.

Demand for this, he predicted, undoubtedly will be high until most of the country's makeshift dwellings have been replaced—and as

Six of Every Ten Homes Privately Financed in 1949

NEARLY 60 pecrent of all new homes built last year were financed under "conventional" lending plans, without any form of Government mortgage insurance or guaranty assistance.

This was disclosed yesterday by the United States Savings and Loan League in a statistical breakdown of new home financing procedures during 1949. In the year, 987,300 houses were started, an all-time record high.

The study showed that conventional lending plans accounted for 59.9 percent of all mortgages issued. Another 31.6 percent were made under the mortgage insurance program of the Federal Housing Administration.

The remaining 8.5 percent were issued to World War II veterans under provisions of the GI bill, and included a mortgage loan guarantee by the Veterans Administration.

"The private home financing has thus continued to be the principal prop behind the greatest home contruction period in history," commented Henry A. Bubb, president of the league.

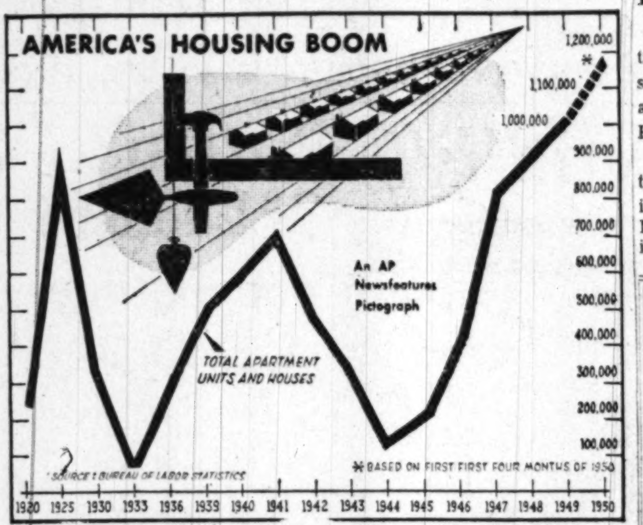
He said that in addition to loans on new construction, private lenders in 1949 assumed the risk of financing other "hundreds of thousands" of purchasers of older existing homes.

40 Arlington Homes Planned

Permit has been issued for construction of 40 homes in the 4400 block of 1st st. and 1st rd., Arlington.

The builder-owner is Crestwood Construction Corp., 4415 Wilson blvd., Arlington. Plans call for the houses to be two-story with basement, and of brick and cinder-block construction. Size is 28 by 24 feet each.

Building Costs Going Up



UP THE GOES—Based on the first four months of 1950, home building appears on the way to smashing last year's record of more than 1,025,000 houses put under construction. Building costs, Federal officials say, show a steady upward movement tute a large part of the cost of a house, and if these go up substantially in price, it is bound to be reflected in the final cost of a house.

"At the present time, the situation definitely is not critical—but the trend definitely has set in.

"Our advice to the people considering buying a home is: 'It is better to buy now.' If present cost trends continue, it is impossible to tell how long we can still build and deliver a house at current prices."

A Home Cool To Summer Heat

WHAT with summer making summary gestures, now is a good time to put the house in shape for the sizzling blasts. It's mostly a matter of clearing the decks.

You can start by rolling up all the heavy rugs, and taking down the heavy draperies, and storing them away. Polished bare floors are cool in summer.

Or, you may use a few washable cotton rugs, or natural-color straw floor coverings. Over the windows, try hanging bamboo blinds, or strip them bare if they look out on a pleasant view.

Clear out elaborate pictures and dust-catching ornaments and bric-a-brac. Though they are important to a room's appearance in a more formal season, in summer a house should look cool and uncluttered and require a minimum of cleaning.

Give the furniture light-colored, washable slipcovers. Denim, gingham and muslin sheeting are attractive and durable slipcover materials.

Heat-reminders are out. It makes the day seem even hotter to look at the fireplace. It can be hidden behind a screen. And those portable heaters should be stored away, while the fans are brought out.

Fresh green leaves in vases will give an outdoor coolness to the house and with a change of water will last many days.

Warm colors like fire-engine red and sunset orange look hotter on a warm day.

Permit Issued For 33 Homes

A group of 33 houses, third section of a 104-home project, is scheduled to be built on 72nd ave. and Marywood st., Glenridge, in Prince Georges County.

The frame, 1½-story houses are to be 30 by 24 feet each. Builder is the Harwood Construction Co., Inc., 1520 K st. Permit has been issued.

Avoiding Trouble With Floors

Inadequate treatment of ground surfaces under basementless houses, together with improper ventilation of crawl space, causes destructive condensation often leading to serious trouble in the floors, according to the Housing and Home Finance Agency.

In an HHFA publication, detailed consideration is given to problems arising from moisture in crawl spaces. The publication, "Crawl Spaces," is available from the Superintendent of Documents, Government Printing Office, Washington 25, D. C. Price is 15 cents.

Rent Controls Removed

The cities of Gainesville and High Springs, Fla., and the village of Aurora, Ohio, have been decontrolled by Housing Expediter Tighe E. Woods as a result of local option actions taken by those municipalities.

long as personal income remains at high levels.

He said, too, that the home building industry may copy a page from the automobile manufacturer's book—trading the house in on a new one every so often.

Easy credit also may be a big factor in home building activity of the future, he observed.

But, Haynes concluded, it is obvious that the home building industry must begin soon to make plans for "the adjustments that will be necessary in another two or three years."

F. H. A. Boosts Mortgage Maximums

FEDERAL Housing Administration's D. C. insuring office has just announced increases in its mortgage insurance maximum—authorized under the National Housing Act passed last month. New maximums are:

Mortgagor	Type Const.	Max. Mtge.
Owner-Occupant	2 br.	$6650
Operator-Builder	2 br.	$5950
Owner-Occupant	3 br.	$7600
Operator-Builder	3 br.	$6800
Owner-Occupant	4 br.	$8550
Operator-Builder	4 br.	$7650

This change represents an increase in the maximum insurable mortgage to the owner-occupant of $650 for one or two-bedroom homes, and an additional increase of $950 for each bedroom in excess of two but not more than four.

The application for mortgage insurance must show that the dwelling meets sound standards of construction, design and livability.

8 Pointers

Guideposts To a Good Home Buy

IF YOU'RE interested in buying a house, this is for you.

The Housing and Home Finance Agency has gone into the matter from your standpoint and reports that there are eight main points to consider in purchasing a home.

Here they are, together with HHFA's amplifying remarks:

COST—Approximately twice the annual income is the limit economists advise.

FAMILY habits and preferences—company-loving or hermit type.

NEIGHBORHOOD — Congeniality is important in suburban life.

ACCESSIBILITY to churches, schools, transportation, police and fire departments—It's a long way to town with no transportation.

TAXES—Nothing is more true than the old cliche about death and taxes.

CONSTRUCTION—It pays to consult someone with construction experience in regard to the house.

TITLE—If it isn't clear, everything else is practically valueless.

BUILDER—Know him. The jerry-type builder has caused more unhappiness to home owners than any other factor.

Ownership Is Best Bet

renting, is the best way to save for future security. Do not be fearful of executing a mortgage which you are capable of retiring from income, for before you know it, you will own your home clear of debt or have a substantial equity in it. It is the best means for savings open to most people.

Home ownership brings many advantages and privileges besides the financial return. These are more important!

There is the satisfaction and pride of ownership. You can improve and beautify your own home to express your family personality. You own and control a piece of America—the greatest homeland in the world.

You can rear your children in security in a congenial neighborhood, among neighbors of similar ambition. You create permament friendships. You become a part of the community.

It is even better to be a direct taxpayer than an indirect one, as taxes are always included in the rent.

Health, happiness, security and comfort all go with owning your own home. Buy one as soon as you can afford one.

Federal Grants To Expedite Slum Clearance

FEDERAL capital grants under the slum clearance and urban redevelopment program are to be used, with local funds, to write off some of the costs of acquisition, clearance and site preparation of blighted areas.

This has been set up so that the project land may be sold or leased at its fair value for the new uses proposed in local redevelopment plans, according to the Housing and Home Finance Agency.

The Federal grants may not amount to more than two thirds of the total write-offs, or deficits, of all the slum clearance projects carried out in a municipality.

Stainless Steel: Promising Future in Architecture

PITTSBURGH—Half the stainless steel made in America soon may be used in architecture.

That's the opinion of some steelmasters in this stainless steel capital.

They base the prediction on rapidly increasing use of the shiny metal in the construction field. One steel executive thinks architecture eventually will consume as much stainless steel production as now is devoted to all uses.

Popularity of stainless steel in building fields is encouraging more fabricators to enter the competition for business. New fabricating processes include manufacture of storm doors and windows and hinges.

But those uses seem like small potatoes compared to the possibility that the future will see whole buildings springing up over the Nation with exteriors of stainless steel.

Allegheny Ludlum Steel Corporation, large stainless producer, will erect a new research laboratory at nearby Brackenridge with stainless steel curtain walls instead of conventional masonry walls.

General Electric Co. has constructed the world's first office building of stainless steel. The four-story structure houses the offices of a new turbine plant at Schenectady, N. Y.

Those two buildings may be the forerunners of canyons of future skyscrapers.

The new curtain wall construction—which also may use aluminum—offers many advantages. Since curtain walls are from three to six inches thick, compared to 18 to 40 inches for masonry walls, they offer enormous savings of space.

THAT'S A CLOTHESLINE—cave dwelling version. The smiling young lady serves to introduce the Air-Line Clothes Dryer for bathrooms. It offers 15 feet of drying space without the bother of nails, screws, or hooks. It soars over the tub—good place for dripping clothes—and holds to the walls by suction cups. The Wallace. Davis Co., Hamden 14, Conn., says it will be available soon at most stores or at $2 each postpaid, from the company.

MAKE your own picture frames from paper mailing tubes cut in half and painted with gesso paint. Materials may be ordered from a New York artist's club who supply complete directions and colors best suited to the particular picture. Gesso may be applied in smooth or textured finishes.

ALUMINUM screen frames designed to hold aluminum shade screening can also be used with conventional wire cloth screens. No screws are needed for assembly. The screen is held in place by metal splines that fit in end grooves.

CLAMP-ON coasters of a swirl of colored plastic tubing are designed to hold a glass in place on the wooden arm of a chair. Colors are bright red, green, yellow and blue—ideal for summer use and lawn chair entertaining.

PIPKINS, the tiny copper pans for melting butter, flaming brandy and general blending of small quantities of sauces, come in a set of five with a brass hanging bar. All have tin linings and brass handles and range in size from a 2-inch diameter to one 3¾ inches across.

DEMAND for paints in colors to match the unusual shades found in the Katzenbach and Warren wallpapers has resulted in a new line of paints in both flat and semigloss in an enamel-type paint which is midway between a flat and enamel finish. It is washable and is said to dry hard overnight.

TRIPLE-DUTY desk accessory is a combination plastic 12-inch ruler, postal scale and letter opener. A groove at one end grips the letter. When the dial button is held, the pointer swings around to register weights up to three ounces. The other end of the ruler is beveled to a point so it can be used for opening letters.

EXTRA drawer space in 1949 and 1950 model cars is provided by a steel drawer with catch lock that clips to the underside of the front seat—a good catch-all for flashlights, cleaning cloths, books and other bulky items. As the seat is adjusted the drawer rides along with it. Finish is in black, gray or brown.

NEAT and attractive holder for packaged throwaway guest towels is made of clear Plexiglas and hangs on the wall. The design is perfectly plain with a simple beveled edge. A bottom ledge and wide center bar hold towels in place. A package of Masslinn towels comes with the holder.

SLEEK electric cooker for table use is the Burpee French fryer which, besides its use for deep fat frying, can be a cooker for baked beans or a corn popper as well. There is a thermostatic temperature control which adjusts from warm to 400 degrees. A wire mesh frying basket comes with the cooker.

Most of the above items are not yet on the market. For names and addresses of manufacturers send a 3 cent stamp to the Home Institute, 230 West 41st St., New York 18, N. Y.

Stop Those Bugs

A calking gun, loaded with calking compound, can be your ally in preventing bugs, beetles and ants from getting in the house. You can barricade their port of entry by shooting the compound into the nooks and crannies through which the pests gain entry. Such guns and calking cartridges are available at paint and hardware stores.

"FLINT HILL"

In Historic Fairfax County, Virginia

SITUATED at an elevation of 420 feet on 20 fertile acres of pasturage, with additional acreage available, this charming brick plantation-type Colonial home is flanked by two wings connected by enclosed arcades and has an overall length of 120 feet. Of center-hall plan, there are 5 bedrooms, 4½ baths. With a 12-mile view from the east porch, it is within 15 miles of downtown Washington over the fast four-lane Lee Boulevard. It is on local bus transportation and near Trailways and Greyhound express stops. A new elementary school is within walking distance and school buses for the public high school, a mile and a half away, pass the gate. There are two country clubs with excellent golf courses within several miles of the estate. The surrounding countryside lends itself to horseback riding either with the Fairfax Hunt or in the numerous nearby Virginia and Maryland horse shows. The pasturage is completely fenced and cross fenced with a white board paddock fence, and is watered by springs forming part of the headwaters of Accotink Creek. There is a four-box stall barn with running water and electricity and a six-room tenant house with heat and bath. The bricks used in the 14-inch solid walls, the hand-hewn oak beams of the 4,000-book capacity library, the graceful stairway in the wide 12-ft. center hall and the delicate mantels all came from a 135-year-old tavern in the historic town of Fairfax, Virginia.

New Low-Cost Housing Development Coming!

Firm of Famous Builders Announces New Project in Beautiful "Parkwood" Area, Featuring Homes in $10,000 Class

IN the very near future the first of a group of 2 and 3 bedroom homes will be opened for inspection in an entirely new development adjoining Kensington Estates.

These beautiful and livable homes are being constructed by the famous firm of Brisker, Korth and Co. and A. Campitelli and Co., recent recipients of national acclaim for pioneering the true low-cost post-War home. Financing of these new homes will be extremely liberal, with very small down payments and in some cases, no down payment. Monthly terms will be lower than rent.

Application for these homes in the beautiful and exclusive Parkwood section (in which are located many of the area's highest-priced homes) are now being received. You are invited to drive out and inspect the site.

IN THE $10,000 TO $12,000 PRICE RANGE EACH HOME WILL BE FULLY EQUIPPED WITH A

Here's a house tailored to fit a narrow lot. Designed by Thomas, Grainger and Barr, architects, Arcade Building, Seattle 1, Wash., it utilizes the 42-foot frontage and 48-foot depth to good advantage. A full basement provides for a recreation room with a second fireplace. Combination living-dining room results in an unbroken sweep of 30 feet. This was selected as Plan AB-132 by the American Builder, trade magazine, 30 Church st., New York 7, N. Y., for its economy of space utilization.

Air Conditioning A Feature of Huge Building

PITTSBURGH, May 27.—This city's new skyscraper office building, largest to be built west of New York City since the war, will be completely air-conditioned by the Carrier Conduit Weathermaster system.

The 40-story structure will provide all outside offices with individual dial control over their own indoor climate.

Engineers report that more than 5 miles of small steel conduit will carry conditioned air from three central points to some 3000 dial-adjusted Weathermaster units. The system's cooling capacity is equivalent to the melting of more than five million pounds of ice each 24 hours.

Get Rid of Rust Before You Paint

Painting steel, iron and other metal requires care in the preparation of the surface and in the selection of the primer. Removing every sign of rust is a must. Before the finishing coat is applied, the unfinished, rust-free surface should be coated with a special metal primer, such as red lead or zinc yellow.

Here's How to Have 'Summer Resort' in the Backyard

MAYBE you can't get to a resort this summer. But you can bring resort life to your home—more easily than you think.

If you have a backyard, porch or level roof, you can enjoy outdoor living right at home. All you need is a little ingenuity and a handy "man about the house."

You needn't be a back-yard engineer to transform a stamp-size porch, yard or flat-top roof into a breeze-swept retreat the entire family can enjoy.

First of all, your home "summer resort" should be weatherproof. The furniture won't need coddling if it's wrought iron, steel, plastic, aluminum or canvas. If you can't afford these, don't overlook those old rockers or love seats in the attic.

The floor of your porch or rooftop room must be able to take rain, sun and rough usage. With a moistureproof quarry tile floor it can withstand years of weather, chair scraping, dancing or ping pong.

A metal table makes a pleasant service spot for summer suppers outdoors. You can roll hot meals from kitchen to outdoor dining spot on a weatherproof buffet cart of wrought iron and tile. Rain and dust won't harm the mobile serving table if it's left out overnight.

A canvas awning with simple trellises at the sides can give your yard added privacy and a cool, gardenlike appearance. A curving walk or flower beds shaped in curves instead of the conventional square or rectangle can make the yard seem larger and add an air of elegant simplicity.

You won't mind smoke in your eyes if it comes from a back-yard barbecue that helps you entertain more guests with less effort. A well-drained base, firebrick inside walls, red brick outside walls, brick chimney and flagstone surfaces topped with clay tile are necessary for the outdoor barbecue.

New Housing Law

The recently enacted Housing Act of 1950 makes possible the purchase of an FHA-insured, two-bedroom house valued at $7000 with a $350 down payment and with 30 years to pay. For a four-bedroom house valued at $9,000, the down payment can be as low as $450 with 30 years to pay, compared to an $1100 down payment and 25 years to pay under the previous law.

Falls Church Economy Home

A PRIVATE showing of the new P & H Economy Home, a prefabricated dwelling produced by Harnischfeger Corporation, Milwaukee, has just been held at the model house, 390 Haycock rd., Falls Church.

The model house is a ranch-type, basementless three-bedroom dwelling, 24 by 36 feet. According to a corporation spokesman, this house and others turned out by the organization have been selling elsewhere, without lot, from $5850 to $8000.

He said P & H homes will be made available shortly to Greater Washington builders, contractors and developers. The model house, he announced, will be opened to public inspection soon.

The Falls Church home was 83 percent completed when shipped from the factory. It was put under roof in one day and was ready for occupancy in 30 days, the spokesman said.

A variety of floor plans and six front elevations are to be available, he reported. Exterior siding and roof color can offer further variety.

The corporation has extended distribution of its houses, which it has been manufacturing for 16 years, from New York to North Dakota and from the Canadian border to Florida.

Construction Awards Down 28 Percent

CONTRACTS awarded for building and heavy engineering works in Greater Washington last month totaled $32,863,000. Only nonresidential building gained over March, according to E. H. Keefe, branch manager of F. W. Dodge Corp.

Last month's total awards are 28 per cent below the March, 1950, figure and 8 percent behind the April, 1949, total, Keefe announced.

Residential awards last month amounted to $22,873,000, nonresidential awards $9,461,000 and heavy engineering works $529,000.

The total volume of contract awards for the first four months of this year is $121,325,000—a 52 percent rise over the corresponding four months of last year, he said.

Residential operations amounted to $85,046,000; more than double the $34,369,000 total for the first third of '49. Nonresidential projects totaled $32,739,000 and heavy engineering $3,540,000 this year, both representing decreases of 20 percent compared with the corresponding period last year.

Contracts awarded for building and heavy engineering works in the District totaled $11,780,000 to show dollar volume losses compared with both the preceding month and April, 1949. Last month's total is 41 percent below the figure for the preceding month and 56 percent behind the April, 1949 total.

Residential awards last month amounted to $7,686,000; nonresidential awards came to $3,939,000 and heavy engineering $155,000. Residential operations fell off 38 percent, nonresidential projects 41 per cent and heavy engineering 82 percent last month compared with the preceding month.

During the first four months of this year contracts were awarded for an aggregate of $43,169,000 in the District, Keefe reported. This figure is about 1 percent above the $42,747,000 total for the corresponding four months of '49.

12-Unit Apartment House

E. M. Willis & Son have filed a permit application to construct a 12-unit apartment building at 1430 19th st. se. The two-story and basement structure will be 50 by 100 feet.

Permit Sought

P. D. Ford & Son, 16 Carroll ave., Takoma Park, have applied for a permit to build a 6-unit apartment building on Roanoke ave. in Takoma Park. The structure, of brick and cinderblock, is to be 46 by 28 feet, with 2½ stories and basement.

Increased Orders For Hard Maple Flooring Noted

ORDERS for northern hard maple, beech and birch flooring jumped more than 50 percent in the first four months of this year over the same period in 1949, it was reported yesterday.

The Maple Flooring Manufacturers Association announced that new orders received by manufacturers came to 23,675,000 feet for the first four months of 1950. The total is 58.6 percent higher than the corresponding months of last year.

According to the association, hard maple flooring is in demand for housing projects, residences, and school plants. An increase in orders for new industrial buildings and factory modernization programs also was received, it was said.

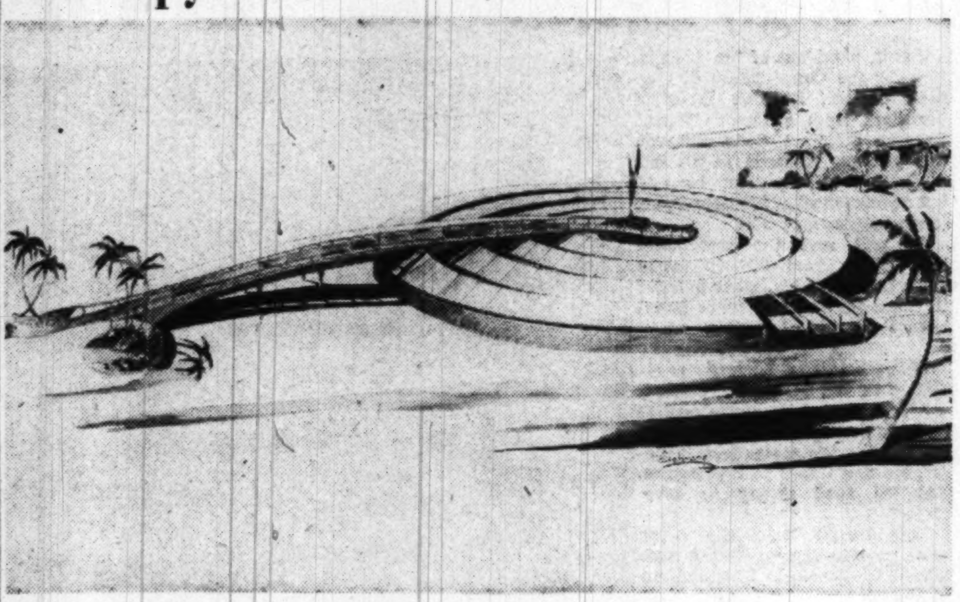
The Spyorama—Or, Exhibit House



This unique structure—the Spyorama—will contain the displays of the first annual National Realtors' Exhibition to be held in Miami Beach, Fla., this fall. It consists of a continuing spiral of display booths beginning at the building's center, entered there by a ramp constructed from the outside of the structure over the roof

FIRST annual National Realtors' Exhibition will be a feature of the forty-third annual convention of the National Association of Real Estate Boards, November 12 to 19, in Miami Beach, Fla., it was announced yesterday.

The Spyorama, a structure designed to provide a new architectural arrangement, will house the exhibits of leading corporations in the fields of building materials; apartment, home, and office equipment and maintenance; business machines and systems; mortgage loans; and insurance.

Institutes and divisions of NAREB will also have displays depicting the activities of the 1107 real estate boards and 44,000 members.

The Spyorama will be a spiral of display booths beginning at the center of the building. It is to be entered at that point by a ramp constructed from the exterior of the building over the roof.

The specially designed structure will be built next to the Miami Beach Municipal Auditorium in which daily general sessions will be held for the 6000 realtors expected to attend the convention.

A village of model homes, both prefabricated and tailor-made at the site, will be erected beside the Spyorama and the auditorum. The entire exhibition area will be fenced in, and the grounds landscaped.

Another feature in the village will be the Futurama Home, incorporating in its construction the newest products and features available for the home builder, including built-in television.

Realty Roundup

INCREASING MORTGAGE DEBT—In the period from 1946 to 1949, mortgage loans made on 1-4 family nonfarm homes amounted to almost 42 billion dollars, according to the Housing Institute. In the same years, the total such debt outstanding increased by about 18 billion dollars.

At the end of last year, the institute reported, the figure was $37,181,000,000 of outstanding gage debt.

AS OF MAY 1, membership of the National Association of Home Builders stood at 16,671—an increase of 1175 since the start of the year, according to Frank W. Cortright, NAHB executive vice president.

COURSES in real estate financing and investment will be held for the third year beginning June 19 at Northwestern University's Chicago campus.

More than 35 individual subjects will be covered in morning and afternoon sessions lasting through June 23. Sponsor is the Mortgage Bankers Association of America.

THE SOCIETY of Industrial Realtors has established its first chapter on the West Coast: A Los Angeles group has been chartered by the society's governing council.

BALTIMORE is the only city in the country known to have a housing court, according to the May issue of the Journal of Housing.

Organized in July, 1947, it had heard cases involving 3826 violations of housing and sanitation codes by the end of last year and collected $17,458 in fines, the journal reported.

FIFTEEN YEARS of progress in residential appraising are outlined in the current issue of The Review, monthly magazine of the Society of Residential Appraisers, which celebrated its anniversary with the issue.

MILTON T. MacDONALD, Jersey City, N. J., banker, has been nominated for president of the Mortgage Bankers Association of America.

Nomination is tantamount to election, which will occur at the association's thirty-seventh annual convention in Detroit in September.

SEVENTH ANNUAL convention of the National Savings and Loan League will be held from today to June 2 in Chicago. Raymond M. Foley, Housing and Home Finance Agency administrator, will be one of the speakers.

April Building Equals All 1933

A total of 126,000 new dwelling units were started last month, topping March by 16,000 and zooming 37,000 units over April, 1949.

According to the National Association of Home Builders, last month's starts represents more houses and apartments than were begun during all of 1933.

Castles—It's Tough Even to Give 'Em Away

By Richard K. O'Malley

BRAUBACH, GERMANY, May 27.—Stop building those castles in the air—you can buy a medieval fortress on the Rhine cheaper than a suburban bungalow.

Some of the tax-harried owners of German castles would gladly give them away if they had somewhere else to live.

They've been hanging out "castle for sale" signs for a long time. It's tough, owning an 80-room stone house and not being able to support it. With postwar economic troubles and high taxes, castles have become a drug on the market.

A castle isn't the handiest thing in the world to own. Imagine climbing a steep hill, 75 or 100 stone steps and wrestling with giant doors every night. Plumbing in the old fortresses is practically nonexistant. Gusty winds blow through long, gloomy corridors and central heating is unheard of.

About the only things a castle offers nowadays are a tremendous roof and a lot of tradition.

Castles to Spare

THERE ARE 10,000 castles in East and West Germany. Of these, 6000 are uninhabitable ruins. About 2000 of the remainder are residences while the rest are partly ruined. Most of the "residence castles" are in the western zones.

Perched on a steep hill overlooking this little town is Marksburg Castle on the Rhine, the most complete and untouched in Germany.

It was built in 980 A. D. and its present occupants refer to a portion added in 1701 as "the new wing." Right now it is the seat of an effort to preserve German castles which have cultural value.

Leader of the move is Fritz Ebhardt, president of the Association for the Conservation of German Castles. Ebhardt inherited his work from a famous father, German architect Bodo Ebhardt. The younger Ebhardt, in his late forties, is an architect himself, but devotes most of his time trying to save German castles.

Ebhardt says the association has raised about 600,000 marks since 1899 when his father founded it. Since the last war there hasn't been a pfennig of income.

Keeping One's Castle

"WHAT WE DO NOW," Ebhardt says, "is advise castle owners on ways they might follow to keep their homes. We advise them on insurance and things of that nature. But we need money to save them."

This doesn't mean that when taxes go into arrears that a state takes over the castle. The administrations are too canny. They know that saddling themselves with a castle can be financially embarrassing.

There have been recent cases, however, where ancient furnishings have been claimed by the state in lieu of taxes.

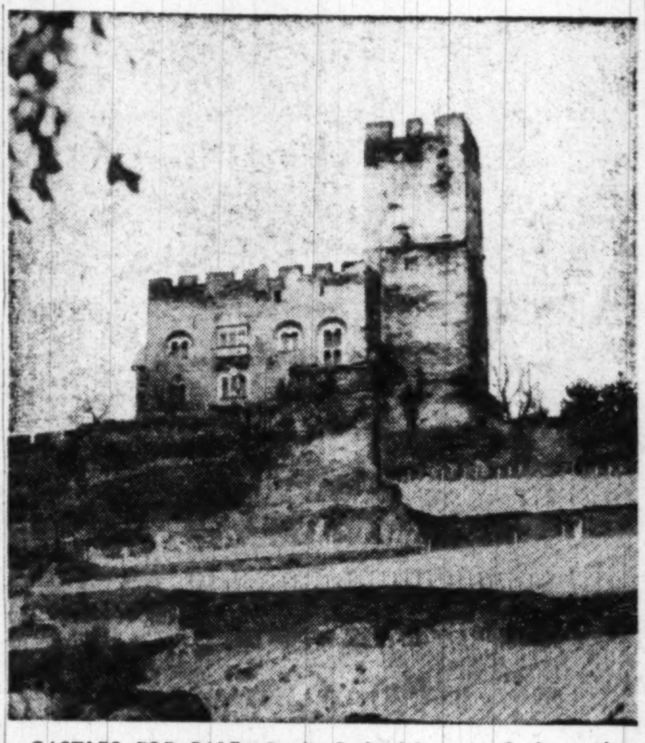
"Descendants of our old noble families often prefer to live in poverty in their ancestral castles rather than walk out," Ebhardt says.

Some, not so proud, have turned parts of their castles into inns or hotels. This has not always been a success because of the general inconvenience of bedding down with history in a pile of stone.

Tradition Losing Out

EBHARDT thinks the German people don't realize they are letting valuable historical tradition go to pot.

"Most of our castles are inconveniently located for casual visitors," Ebhardt explains. "So our plan to get tourist income failed."



CASTLES FOR SALE—Castle Gothenfels, near Caub on the Rhine, is one of the 2000 German castles which are still inhabitable. Postwar economic troubles and high taxes have made castles a drug on the market.

Ebhardt's own home in Marksburg has 40 rooms, some hewed from stone, others painfully stacked up by men of other centuries. It is an interesting place to see. It would be a nightmare as home.

Sitting in the room where the Kaiser Friederich Barbarossa moodily scanned the Rhine from a cornice window has its sentimental value, but it's small comfort on a winter day.

Ebhardt wishes Americans of German descent would take interest in helping to preserve the castles. The West German Republic has not.

He points out that the Nazi regime first took over all the castles, but speedily found out they were a losing proposition to maintain.

"They handed them back in a hurry," he says.

LOOK BEFORE YOU LEAP!

THE Brookville RAMBLER

Before you buy a house anywhere, you should know what you're getting. It's not an easy job unless you know what to look for. Here are some hints.

Construction — Your Brookville Rambler features an all-brick, 3-bedroom home, made of the finest material and employing the technique of the Gelman Construction Company, exclusive builders of "Perma-bilt" homes.

Additional Features— Look at its large, beautifully shrubbed lot; the gleaming Beautycraft kitchens (the stove has a glass see-all oven door); a 7½-foot Coolerator Refrigerator; Colored ceramic tile bath with built-in clothes hamper; screened windows, completely equipped with Venetian blinds—just a few of the conveniences found in the Brookville Rambler. In addition, you have City sewer and water, while all streets are paved and have curb and gutter.

Layout— If you will notice, each room has been planned so that you can enjoy the maximum of convenience and yet maintain privacy of individual rooms. You will find Brookville's much talked-about dine-area. Our layout has been acclaimed the finest design yet, featuring three large bedrooms all on one floor with no steps to run up and down—Too, a spacious storage attic.

Transportation, Schools and Churches— Check with our representative—he will be glad to point out the many schools and churches in the immediate vicinity. Transportation is "just outside your door."

$10,950 FULL PRICE (FHA AND VA APPROVED)—NO DOWN PAYMENT TO VETS —$950 DOWN TO NON-VETS.

Yes, believe it or not, it's true—only $10,950 for this beautiful Brookville Rambler with its many, many desirable features. So come on out, folks, and see for yourself why this is America's Greatest Home Value.

DIRECTIONS: Straight out Georgia Ave. extended to 13000 block of Georgia Ave. to Sample House.

Increased Use Of Trussed Rafters Noted

A LARGE increase in use of trussed rafters for roof construction in frame dwellings is reported by the Timber Engineering Co., 1319 18th st. nw.

A spokesman said that one out of every four housing units built in Greater Washington last year used TECO-designed rafters and split-ring connectors.

Of 15,400 frame housing projects, other than multiple-story dwellings, a total of 3785 were built with trussed rafters, he said. Only one housing unit was built with this type of rafter in 1946, the year of its introduction.

The spokesman said the popularity of the trussed rafters is due to their economy and convenience.

In a 26 by 32 foot house, he reported, 27 percent less lumber is required for framing roof and ceiling than in the joist-and-rafter type of construction.

Business Construction At Low Level, Study Shows

BUSINESS and industrial construction has been at low tide during the post-war period, according to an analysis made by the Machinery and Allied Products Institute.

Business construction, in terms of constant dollars, has averaged lower in recent years than it did 20 years earlier, despite the growth in population and increased industrial activity, the institute found.

In charting plant expenditures and equipment expenditures, it noted a similar lag. Computed at constant prices, equipment expenditures for the five years from 1946 to 1950 were up nearly 150 percent from the five-year period from 1926 to 1930.

Plant expenditures, on the other hand, were 10 percent lower in the postwar period than they were in the late 1920's.

Prior to 1930, plant expenditures constituted about 40 percent of total fixed capital outlays, whereas in the postwar period they have averaged only about 25 percent, the institute discovered.

In seeking explanation of the lag in postwar plant construction, five factors were examined:

1. Economies in the use of space. The conclusion was reached that this factor has been present throughout history and there is no clear evidence that it has exerted more influence in recent years than formerly.

2. Cost of construction. The study showed that construction costs have risen much more sharply in recent years in relation to equipment prices than they did formerly.

3. Shortage of outside equity capital. High taxes on personal income, the institue said, have aggravated the difficulties of mobilizing risk capital. At the same time, the low level of stock prices prevailing during most of the postwar period has discouraged new equity flotations.

4. Earlier overbuilding. This was discarded as a factor affecting the postwar period, because plant construction figures show no overbuilding since the 1920's and any excess at that time should have been fully digested long ago..

5. A decline in the growth of the country's labor force. The institute cited the long history of decline in the birth rate, the curtailment of immigration and increasing absorption of workers in government service. Is said that from 1900 to 1910, about 660,000 workers a year were added to the private labor force as compared to only 525,000 from 1940 to 1950. The labor force which, at the beginning of the century, was growing at about 2.5 percent per year, has recently been growing at the rate of only 1 percent.

In conclusion, the institute observed: "It is doubtful if the several factors reviewed add up to a reasonably satisfactory explanation of the low level of postwar plant expenditure. There remains an element of obscurity, if not mystery, in the phenomenon."

How To Get New Home From Old

GETTING a new house without having to buy one sounds like something dreamed up by a magician. Yet, according to leading real estate appraisers, it's no trick at all.

Whether your home is 5 years old or 35 it can be converted into a dwelling with an "effective age" of less than a year—provided the original design was sound and the upkeep has been adequate.

The key phrase is "effective age" which, as defined by appraisers, is "that age to which good original planning, modernization of kitchen, baths, heating system, etc., plus maximum upkeep, have tended to reduce the actual age."

The secret is modernization. The actual age of your house may run to 30 or 40 years or more, but a complete renovating job can turn back the clock and "make it a child again."

According to an analysis by the Minneapolis-Honeywell Regulator Co., here are the major steps required to turn the trick:

1. A new roof and an insulation job.
2. Exterior and interior painting and wallpapering.
3. A new heating plant with automatic heat controls.
4. A modern kitchen, including such items as new cabinets, refrigerator, stove, dishwasher and garbage disposal unit.
5. A new tile bath, with fixtures.
6. A floor-sanding and refinishing job.
7. New plumbing installations and light fixtures if necessary, including new piping and new wiring.

June's a Key Garden Month This Year

By James H. Beattie

GARDEN work in Washington reaches a peak of activity during June. This is particularly true this season because cool, wet weather has delayed many tasks usually performed in May. Many of these have become "must" activities for early June. In 1950, as seldom before, late planted gardens have an excellent chance to equal the results of those started much earlier. There is still plenty of time to plant a garden.

Several garden activities must have attention during June. Here are a few of the more important ones:

Soil preparation—Early June is about the last promising period for the plowing or spading of the garden site. This is very true about land occupied by cover crops or other growth.

Make succession plantings of snap beans, sweet corn, beets and leaf lettuce (Slobolt). There's still time to set out peppers, eggplant, tomatoes and sweet potato plants and to sow the seeds of cucumbers, melons, okra, bush lima beans, cabbage and tomato, the two latter in the open ground for growing plants for the late crop.

Trimming and training of tomatoes and the training of tall-growing peas, pole beans, vine crops and others must have constant attention.

Cultivation, mulching, weed control, irrigation and the application of supplementary plant food require attention.

The list of important June garden tasks would be incomplete without mentioning insect and disease control. Cabbage worms, the Mexican bean beetle and cucumber beetles are likely to require a lot of attention.

Still Time to Plow

EARLY JUNE is not too late to start the preparation of the garden for the season. A wide choice of vegetables may be planted. The recent rains have softened the soil and put it in good condition for easy preparation. Most garden land not previously turned this spring is liable to be heavily overgrown with vegetation. Cover crops or other growth turned under now may cause serious trouble in the cultivation of vegetables. To avoid this cut and remove the growth and place it in the compost pile for later use. Large accumulations of green vegetable matter turned under at this time are liable to temporarily rob the crops of nourishment. Later on, such is returned to the soil with interest.

All except a few of the cool weather vegetables may be planted during June with excellent chances for success. Here's a list of important vegetables that are well adapted to planting until at least the middle of June:

Sprouting broccoli, cabbage, leaf lettuce (Slobolt), beets, carrots, chard, beans, cucumbers, squashes, okra, soybeans, tomatoes, eggplant, peppers, sweet potatoes and sweet corn. The time for the spring planting of head lettuce, cauliflower, onions, potatoes, spinach and a few others has passed but there will be another chance for most of them next fall.

Space Savers

GREAT savings in garden space may be accomplished by training some plants to supports. Tomatoes and cucumbers lend themselves very well to this culture, thereby frequently doubling the yield from the area occupied. Stakes, trellises made of fencing or other material, or even border fences may be used to good advantage. The important point is that the work of training garden plants must start early and receive constant attention through the season.

There's a limit to these space saving practices because plants require an abundance of sunshine and crowding plant supports too close together may defeat an otherwise excellent plan. In most cases it is best to have the rows of trellised plants 3 to 4 or more feet apart, thereby allowing the sunlight free access.

Training garden plants to supports usually requires a certain amount of pruning. Tomatoes are trimmed to one to two main branches, cucumbers to one main stem, and pole beans are thinned to one to two plants to each pole and the side branches that tend to cross over to adjoining poles cut off beyond the outer flower clusters. It is wise to set tomato stakes, bean poles and other plant supports before planting, and to go over the plants at least weekly, trimming and tying where required. This work is especially important during the next few weeks.

Destroy Robber Plants

WEEDS start and grow at a prodigious rate during June. Some mulch the space around the plants and between the rows to prevent weed growth. Straw, leaves, or some other weed-free, noninjurious material may be used. One gardener has just reported mulching his garden with fresh sawdust. Unless he uses a lot of highly nitrogenous fertilizer he may run into trouble. The same objection applies to shavings. Mulching is usually expensive and not entirely effective, as some weeds come through. During periods of excessively wet weather a mulch may become objectionable.

Frequent shallow cultivation, hand hoeing and a certain amount of hand weeding are the best control measures for the average home gardener.

Right now the necessity for artificial watering appears to be remote, but a few hot days may quickly alter this situation. Should watering become necessary it should consist of a thorough soaking now and then, not frequent light sprinklings.

CABBAGE caterpillars, green striped worms that attack cabbage, cauliflower, sprouting broccoli and related plants are sure to be troublesome at this season. They may be easily controlled by dusting with Rotenone, but one must start before the pests have "dug in." The Mexican bean beetle is not difficult to control with the same remedy but here too, an early start when the first hard-shelled beetles appear is necessary.

The Colorado potato beetle and the potato leaf hopper are easily destroyed by dusting or spraying with DDT. These and other garden pests should be fought from the beginning of the season until autum. Miscellaneous Publication No. 605 of the Department of Agriculture, "A Vegetable Gardener's Handbook on Insects and Diseases," contains complete information on this subject.

Sowing Requires Skill

WHILE seed sowing is not a precision job — especially when nature does it—gardeners soon learn that much can be saved if it is done with some skill and judgment.

If sown too thinly, there may be vacant spaces in the row, caused by local mishaps such as drowning, or washing out, or an attack of fungus. If sown too thickly, seedlings will come up crowded, and there will be extra work in thinning out the excess plants.

Some seeds are often sown so thickly that 90 percent of the plants must be sacrificed, in order to give the remainder room enough to mature. This is waste of both seed and labor. Then what will serve as a guide to follow?

As a general rule, not more than 15 seeds to an inch should be needed, when seed is of standard germination, and the soil is fairly porous. Start with that rule, and then make these exceptions:

If seed is of substandard germination, or known to be old, double that rate. Carrot seedlings are feeble, and often have difficulty breaking through the soil if it is at all inclined to crust. Use twice as much carrot seed if you have doubts about your soil being porus enough. In the case of large seeds, such as beet, Swiss chard, and peas, which can be spaced precisely, sow them an inch apart.

Bush beans usually are allowed to grow 4 inches apart in the row. If you wish to avoid vacant spaces, a good way is to sow beans in pairs, spaced 4 inches apart. Seldom will both seeds in a pair fail to grow. If both grow, one can easily be pulled up, or let them both develop, since twin plants will do as well as singles.

The surest way to sow small seeds is to take a few in the hand, and let them fall through the fingers into the drill which has been prepared. Get close to the ground, and with a little practice you can quickly acquire control so that the seeds will be evenly distributed, each sufficiently distant from the next to prevent entanglement.

Garden Club Activities

"QUICKIE Arrangements for Busy People" is the subject of a lecture to be given by Mrs. R. E. Creighton of Chattanooga, Tenn., in a special program to be presented by the Neighborhood Garden Club of Arlington. The program will be held at 8 p. m. June 9, in the Mount Olivet Methodist Church. Mrs. Creighton, who was a judge at the recent National Flower Show, is an instructor of judging schools and judge for the National Council of State Garden Clubs. For information about the lecture, call Mrs. W. P. Lemmond, OX. 1151, or Mrs. J. K. Bailey, OW. 8898.

THE ORGANIZATION meeting of the Narcissus Council will be held at 8 p. m. May 31, in the lecture room of the Mount Pleasant Branch Library, 16th and Lamont sts. nw. A round-table discussion of the aims of the organization and plans for the first year will be conducted.

COLONEL Charles A. H. Thompson of Kensington will discuss "Gladiolas," on the weekly program of the Bethesda-Chevy Chase Harvest Show Committee, today at 1:15 p. m., over Station WBBC.

FLOWERS and vegetable plants, shrubs and bulbs, as well as fresh vegetables, fruit and flowers will be on sale May 30 at the Garden Mart of St. John's Church, Olney, Md.

NEWLY ELECTED officers of the Washington Garden Club are: Mrs. Floyd Wirsing, president; Mrs. Roy Jorolemon, first vice president; Mrs. Arthur Mapin, second vice president; Mrs. Charles Sebastian, recording secretary; Mrs. John D. Rhodes, corresponding secretary; Miss Minnie Hunt, treasurer; Mrs. Charles W. Arth, counselor; Mrs. Charles V. Grunwell, parliamentarian.

Cutting It Long

As soon as the temperature hits 80 degrees, mowers should be adjusted to cut lawns at 1½ to 2 inches. The longer grass provides shade for the roots, reduces moisture evaporation, and lowers soil temperatures—making it easier for the lawn to survive the hot months.

Less Raking

When a lawn is mowed counter-clockwise, the clippings are thrown to the left, into the path of the "next time around." As a result, says Scotts Lawn Research, the clippings are chopped finer and drop out of sight around the grass roots.

Lawn-Watering Time

A lawn needs watering when the upper inch or so of the soil reveals any dryness. This dryness can be quickly determined, says Scotts Lawn Research, by taking a small sampling plug of earth from the grass root area.

Use Your Hoe Like Safety Razor

Ground should be stirred to kill weeds and break its crust, but never deep enough to disturb the roots of plants. Modern teaching favors a sharp hoe over cultivator teeth, and the hoe should be used for cutting, not digging. Free circulation of air in the soil has proved vital to plant growth, so the ground ought to be made porous after every shower or irrigation

Healthier Lawns

When lawn grass is "cut longer" than the conventional ¾ to 1 inch length, growth of the root system is stimulated. The more vigorous the roots, the healthier the lawn.

Home Product Tops

Quick-grown, young vegetables are the best, and only the home garden, where they may be harvested as needed, can provide them.

Pick Beans Early for Best Yield

DO YOU know beans? It pays a home gardener to know some facts about this nutritious food crop, which yields more food for the space occupied than most other vegetables, and which he can eat at their most delicious stage, just before the seeds have begun to form.

If pods are kept picked so that seed is never matured, the plants will continue to bear as long as they remain vigorous and green. So almost twice as large a yield can be enjoyed, if all pods are harvested when they are at their best, for cooking, canning, or freezing.

Snap beans are of tropical origin, easily killed by frost, and the seed should not be sown until the ground warms up and the danger of frost is over. There are varieties that grow on vines and those that grow on bushes. While the vines bear more heavily, the bush beans have been so improved by plant breeders, that most gardeners prefer them.

New varieties are being introduced so fast, it might be said there is an improved model every year.

The first big improvement—years ago—was to breed out the string. Some folks still ask for "string beans," like grandmother used to cook, after laboriously removing the strings.

Quality snap beans this year have pods six inches or longer, straight, round, filled with tender flesh.

Wax and green beans differ chiefly in color; they are about equal in vitamin content and food value and the taste is similar.

One warning concerning their cultivation is not to work the patch while the leaves of the beans are wet, either with dew or from rain. It may spread disease.

Pole beans are the heaviest yielders of the family. They are later in season and more tender to cold than bush beans. They should not be planted until the weather is settled and the ground warm. They must be provided with wire or cord to climb, and planted at least six inches apart. Be sure to enrich the soil for beans by applying at least four pounds of plant food for each 100 feet of row.

Giving Fertilizer To the Gladioli

Apply fertilizer to gladioli with caution, advises Dr. W. D. McClellan and Dr. N. W. Stuart, plant scientists of the United States Department of Agriculture. Their studies at Beltsville, Md., show that well fertilized "glads"—particularly those getting heavy dosages of nitrogen—are much more susceptible to leaf spot and bulb rot diseases than those not fertilized.

Many growers apply mixed fertilizer at planting time to increase flower production. The plant scientists suggest that only a little be used. They point out that a handful of fertilizer over a small area may actually equal a ton to the acre and may do more harm than good.

Gladioli grown in the average garden-type soil generally need no fertilizer. Soilless culture tests at Beltsville indicate that glads have an unusually efficient feeding power and relatively low nutrient requirements.

Regular Springtime Visit

Perennials Are Appearing Again

By Katherine Barrett Pozer

WATCHING for old friends to reappear in the garden is one of the delights of spring. As the perennials now begin to fill out the beds, we anxiously wait to see how they have fared through the winter. Some have failed to show up as yet, others need encouragement and yet others seem to have enjoyed the mild winter and following untimely cold and are trying to take up more than their share of space.

We give them all a little assistance in the matter of a good commercial fertilizer or the old standby, 5-10-5, which is much cheaper and is so good for general garden use.

Beds should be thinned out to allow for circulation of air and a chance for the sun to reach the soil. Later the plants can be allowed to overlap. This will help preserve moisture and keep down weeds, but in early summer the plants need a breathing space. When transplanting we find it good garden practice to always put a little bone meal in the bottom of the hole. Bone meal is a slow acting fertilizer and will supply food for a good period.

Year-to-Year Job

A REALLY successful garden is not made in a season or two. It should contain a collection of plants added to year by year, with all unworthy material discarded.

Both annuals and perennials play an important part. The perennials are the standbys; like the old stay-at-home friends. The annuals are like the new charming acquaintances we meet once a year and who take off for Florida or parts unknown when seasons change. We fit the annuals into our flower beds just as we do such acquaintances in our social life. If we like them we make permanent friends and plan to include them in next year's activities.

Most welcome among our early summer visitors are the old-fashioned roses which bloom ahead of their newer sisters. Our old Empress of China climbs high into a tall deutzia and hangs garlands of pink bloom among the white blossoms of that hardy shrub. Other sprays have climbed into the vitex and seem to be trying to cover with pink blossoms the bare limbs of that shrub, so tardy in putting out its foliage. This is the one fault of the vitex, with its masses of lavender blue flowers which come in midsummer.

The Old Rose

THE old-fashioned roses are used too infrequently, for they are very lovely when planted with other shrubs or used as a hedge plant where they prove most useful in keeping out unwelcome visitors. There are many white and pink varieties and the old Harrison's yellow was included in almost every old world garden.

Visitors to the Tulip Show held at the Takoma Park Elementary School were welcomed at the entrance by a border of old-fashioned pink roses which were making a splendid display. The bushes were covered with bloom and their fragrance filled the air.

At the show we found many fine tulips, among them some "parrots" which were exceptionally lovely. We saw the "Fantasy" with its fringed petals and green splashes and its darker companion, Therese, which has the same marking. There were also some excellent blue parrots. "Full Moon," winner of the best tulip in the show, is a tall stately Darwin, very pale yellow in color. A bronze Henry IV won best breeder and Charles Needham the best Darwin. This is a brilliant red of excellent form.

About Wistaria

MANY gardeners are bewailing the lack of bloom on the wistaria, for it is a real loss when it fails to appear. But the cold weather seems to have come just when the buds were forming and killed them. Once established, wistaria is usually a consistent bloomer, but it does not take too kindly to moving and in some instances will take several years after moving to resume flowering.

Wistaria is another plant which comes in many varieties unknown to the average gardener. Some bloom before the foilage appears and some after. Some Japanese varities have clusters of bloom two or more feet in length and there are many shades and combinations.

One of the loveliest and one which did bloom this year in spite of the cold spring is the double flowered purple—the floribunda violacea plena. The individual blooms are like great purple violets and it is very fragrant. In planning to include wistaria in the garden it is important to get stock from a nursery. Good nursery stock is usually grafted and has bloomed before being sold so that it will, in most cases, bloom next season. Seedlings have been known to take as long as 15 years before starting to bloom. Sometimes lack of bloom is caused by need for pruning both root and vine. But this year's absence seems definitely to be due to the cold days of early spring.

Double O CRAB GRASS KILLER
A New Crabgrass Killer That Works
DESCRIPTION—Double O Crabgrass Killer is a new selective weed killer processed from potassium cyanate. It effectively eliminates crabgrass with little or no damage to desirable turf grasses. Any tip injury resulting from treatment is superficial and disappears with first mowing. It is non-poisonous, and non-volatile and does not affect untreated vegetation.
RECOMMENDED USES — Double O Crabgrass Killer can be used to kill crabgrass seedlings or mature crabgrass plants. Several treatments are often required for seedlings as crabgrass germinates over several months. For mature crabgrass one treatment is usually sufficient.

Don't Put Your Purse Away: June Is Month of Gifts

NOW that Christmas, Mother's Day and other present-giving occasions have been met and overcome, this is a reminder that June is at hand.

June, the month of, that is. The month of marriages, of graduations, of Father's Day, vacations, and weekend visits: the month of gifts.

If you're puzzling over a suitable wedding present these days, you're not alone. It should carry your wishes for the newlyweds' happiness; it must be appropriate; it ought to be adaptable to use in the new home.

Among possible household gifts, few appear so glamorous and luxurious at so small a cost as beautiful glassware. There are many hand-cut, hand-etched, gold-decorated, hand-painted and undecorated designs and patterns, making it easy to choose one which will fit in with silver and china patterns selected by the bride.

Use Brides' Registry

IF SHE has already selected her crystal pattern, the brides' registry in the shops will probably show you which pattern she has chosen, and guide your choice of pieces so as to avoid duplication.

The bride's registry or gift preference list also enables one to try out pieces of glassware to see how they will combine with gifts of silver and china.

As a starter set of glassware, the bride will need either water tumblers or goblets, with matching sherbet glasses. The sherbet glass and double for seafood or fruit cocktails, and it may be placed on a matching glass plate for serving dessert.

The most versatile plate is the 7-inch size, which can double as a salad plate and for other purposes. Six-inch plates are bread-and-butter size, and 10 inches is appropriate for luncheon or dinner plates.

If water glasses for the bride have already been selected by someone else, you might consider the useful addition of 12-ounce tumblers, which can be used for iced tea or coffee or other cool iced drinks.

Authorities on etiquette say after-dinner coffee cups and saucers need not match the glassware used on the table, since after-dinner coffee is served usually after the table has been cleared, or served in another room.

Don't Forget Father

MEN dislike fuss and feathers, prize masculine simplicity in their possessions. Bookends and ornamental figurines in crystal-clear handmade American glassware are appealing.

These are made in the form of horses' heads, birds, animals and Chinese figures.

Ice tubs and ice buckets, generous-sized ashtrays and cigarette-boxes, all in undecorated modern patterns, make appropriate gifts for Father's Day.

For weekend hostess gifts and bridge prizes, there is a wide choice of sugar-and-creamers, jam jars, covered candy dishes, relish dishes, candlesticks and countless other pieces. For the girl graduate, a delightful idea is to establish a crystal pattern for her hope chest, to be added to on succeeding Christmases and birthdays.

Canaries in Bright Colors To Match Home Furnishing

NORTH HOLLYWOOD, Calif., May 27.—The sweet-singing canary, long a pet-shop best seller, may become part of the interior decorator's trade.

Once clad only in nature's yellow and greens, the tiny birds are now being "color bred" in a score of hues. A leading breeder predicts they may ultimately come in any shade of the rainbow.

This means, says Mrs. Hilda Christopher, that "perhaps within five years it will be possible to match drapes, rugs, upholstery or wall paper with a canary. Half a dozen birds of different but harmonious shades could be used in the same room, their colors complementing those of the furnishings."

Sort of a symphony of living color—if not sound. Mrs. Christopher can't guarantee all birds will tweet in the same key.

Hilda, as she is known in bird-fancying circles, is brunette, 40, the wife of a Los Angeles detective, and one of the Nation's most successful color breeders, which she estimates number more than 10,000. Her back-yard-bred birds have won 85 trophies, 501 first-place ribbons and uncounted lesser awards.

People began trying to "paint" canaries by selective breeding some 15 years ago, she related. The popularity of the business is attested by the half dozen magazines now devoted wholly or in part to it.

New colors are developed by mating canaries with other members of the finch family, of which there are numerous branches including sparrows and linnets.

THE current goal, Hilda said, is "cardinal, a fire-engine red." Although breeders are far from this, they have achieved a variety of paler reddish hues including flamingo, apricot, orange, copper, red mahogany and vermillon.

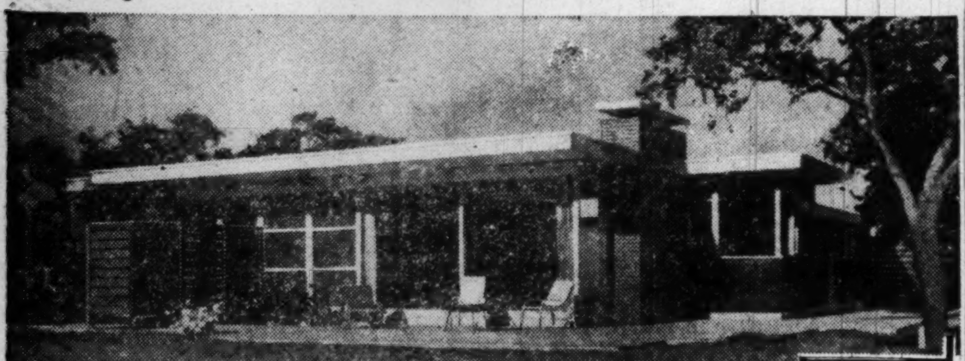
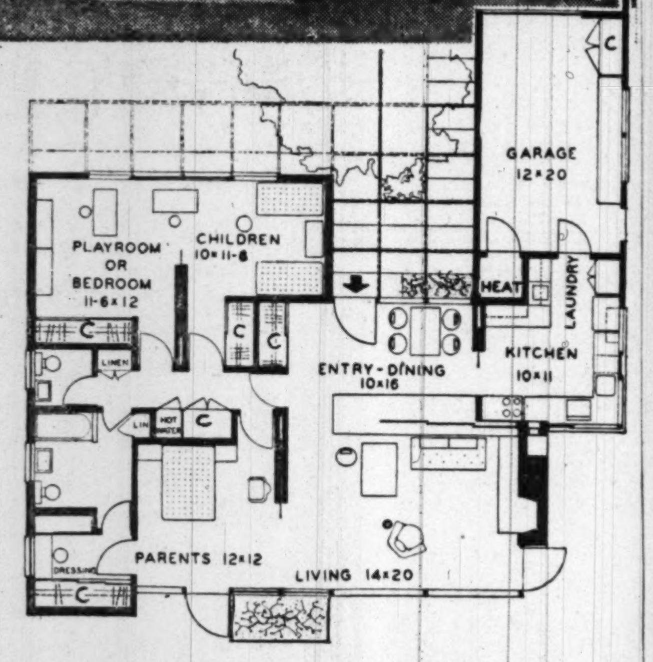
California Home is Museum Piece





Modern living as shown to New York by a Californian. This house is built in the garden of the Museum of Modern Arts amid Manhattan's midtown skyscrapers

By David Bareuther
AP Real Estate Editor

NEW YORK.—The California story of modern living is being told in terms of plywood, glass and masonry in an exhibition house nestled among New York's midtown skyscrapers in the garden of the Museum of Modern Art.

The house demonstrates many of the innovations in modern architecture that are influencing the planning of new ones across the country.

Built by the museum in cooperation with the Woman's Home Companion, the house was designed by Gregory Ain, Los Angeles architect.

Ain is an exponent of the Western school of design that contends an architect's duty is to lead his clients "out of the wilderness of traditional design."

Built on a Slab

THIS HOUSE, one-story high, is built on a concrete slab, has a flat roof, uses great expanses of glass and exploits open planning by merging rooms with the aid of sliding partitions. The exterior is striated fir plywood.

The museum announces that Ain's plan was selected "to show that good modern architectural design is possible in the speculatively built house, which is the kind lived in by most Americans."

Comprising three bedrooms, large living room, separate dining area, kitchen and garage, the house is planned for a typical development lot of approximately 60 by 120. It covers an area of 1420 square feet.

The museum reports cost estimates, if the house is built in a group of 10 with variations of street facades, from $15,500 to $19,500, depending on local conditions, location and choices of finishes. These costs were estimated to include refrigerator, range, sink and washing machine.

The house has a fireplace, one complete bath and one lavatory with washstand and toilet.

Living Room on Rear

THE LIVING room is located at the rear garden side of the house and has a glass wall facing a terrace. Broad roof overhangs shade the windows.

Nine-foot ceilings and the sliding wall panels produce spaciousness throughout the interior.

Living room, parents' bedroom, dining area and kitchen can all be merged into one living area, or subdivided for privacy by moving the sliding partitions.

The children's rooms also are planned so they can be thrown together into one large bedroom-playroom, or may be used as two separate rooms.

Construction Details

THE CONCRETE floor slab, covered with plastic tile, is designed for radiant heating coils. Gypsum board panels are used for ceilings. Plywood is used for all wall surfaces in the drywall construction.

The fireplace wall of the living room is built up of long narrow Roman style bricks in block bond, a pattern in which there is no overlap. The hearth is a soapstone slab, raised above the floor high enough to serve as a coffee table.

Business Space Short in Many U. S. Cities

Retail business space is, on the whole, insufficient to meet the demand in 54 percent of 470 cities survyed recently by the National Association of Real Estate Boards.

A good balance, however, exists in another 41 percent of the communities, according to NAREB's survey.

Purchase prices for commercial property at the start of 1950, the survey showed, were at about the level of a year ago in 65 percent of the reporting cities, and volume of sale was about the same as a year ago in 54 percent.

Two-Story Houses

Chesapeake Development Corp., 8117 University lane, Silver Spring, is seeking a permit to build seven two-story and basement homes on 10th ave. and Osage and Navahoe sts., New Hampshire Estates, Md.

Homes Increase One-Eighth in Number Since War

More than 4,500,000 new homes have been added to the national housing supply since the war's end, including units now under construction.

This was announced by C. B. Sweet, president of the National Retail Lumber Dealers Association. "The total," he said, "which includes 720,000 new farm homes, means that the supply of housing in this country has increased about one-eighth in the five-year period."

He said retail materials dealers over the country report that there should be a sufficient supply of building products to permit indefinite continuation of the high rate of housing starts, if the demand holds up.

New Silver Spring Homes

Woodside Construction Co., 919 Highland dr., Silver Spring, has applied for a permit to build three homes on Cascade st. and three others on Dunkirk st., in Silver Spring. The one-story brick and cinderblock houses will be 39 by 31 feet.

It's Like a Nice Big Party:

Everybody's Just Dying to Get In It!

By Sonia Stein

WHAT a party! Never saw so many people dying to come. The Washingtonians who are buying tickets for the National Celebrities Golf Tournament and Bob Hope Celebrities show, and the celebrities who will appear, all seem to be looking forward to next weekend with unlimited enthusiasm.

Hope, who claims there's little he'd rather do than play a benefit unless it's play golf, is obviously in for a fine weekend. He'll play golf at the Army-Navy Country Club all day Saturday, sparking ad libs for the gallery like a roman candle, and then do the Saturday night show at the National Guard Armory.

Sunday he'll tee off again.

Even as he was taking a horizontal rest between rehearsals for his television show last night on NBC, Hope was looking forward to his self-imposed grind of next weekend. "We'll have a lot of laughs," he said.

He Likes These Audiences

HOPE likes Washington audiences—he's played to plenty of them, including a select little group in the Gold Room at the White House. But then he likes people (in as overwhelming a mutual appreciation society as has ever existed) and makes them feel it. As he explains in an article in the current issue of Coronet, "People are great!" He was having a tough time with his audiences in Dallas a few years back and somebody tipped him off that he was fighting with his audience.

"The world is a mirror reflecting your attitude. If you have faith in your fellow man, you'll find out what I discovered a long time ago," he says. "People are great."

Which is why people seem to love Hope. He obviously loves them.

For his golf appearances, Hope hasn't yet selected his tailleur.

In rebuttal to B. Crosby's remarks before a Scottish tournament a week ago when Crosby said he'd be wearing two pairs of pants over "long underwear of a repulsive type," which "will make me look from the rear like Bop Hope," our Robert says that "Crosby from the front looks like me from the back."

The other three boys in Hope's foursome have not yet revealed what they will wear, either. But they have revealed their golf scores. Ouch! Hope, a really expert player, is expected to be surrounded by such turf-destroying duffers as Messrs. Arthur Godfrey, Walter Winchell and Billiards Champion Willie Hoppe who is more at home on another green.

Laughs the Godfrey Laugh

CHUCKLED GODFREY when asked about his golf prowess, "Hah! I don't know what kind of golf Hoppe plays, but as for Winchell and me!" And then he laughed the Godfrey laugh, rumbling like a kettle drum. "Walter has done some putting practice, I understand, but me!" And he laughed again.

A good horseman but not much of a golfer, Godfrey says he's "damned if I'd play golf on that Alpine mountain goat patch out there" if it weren't for what the tournament is for and because of "all my pals in Washington." (The Army-Navy Country Club's hills and ravines are plenty tough on a couple of those 47 fractures Godfrey sustained in an automobile accident some years ago not so far away from the club itself.)

Since the money raised by the tournament and the show goes to fight juvenile delinquency, Godfrey is anxious to come on that account anyway. But there's something about Washington that's home to him. Since it was here he rose from a not very prosperous announcer who got sacked for talking back to a station manager, to his present eminence as a prodigiously prosperous citizen who can talk back to network vice presidents on the air and off, and get nothing but a weak grin as punishment, it's most pleasantly home.

One of the things he likes best about Washington is the old friends. Washington fans, like any kind of civilized old friends, wave at him and say hello. They show marked restraint about asking for autographs—after all, if you're real old pals you're beyond the autograph-asking stage, and that's the way Godfrey likes it.

Turn About, and All That

JUST as Hope did a guest appearance on Godfrey's Homecoming Show at the Armory last year, Godfrey will do a guest shot on Hope's show this year. What'll he do? "I'll come out and say hello, I guess." No jokes? "Well, I'll tell some if I can think of some," he says. So everything's OK as you can see, it being a dark, dark day when Godfrey can't think of some.

With Danny Kaye also cutting loose up there, the proceedings may very likely shake the rafters loose.

As for sheer dynamic magnetism! Maybe the stage had better be guarded. Named by the Institute for the Study and Development of Male Magnetism as among the eight most magnetic men in America are Messrs. Godfrey (natch), Gordon MacRae, and Ben Hogan which gives us almost half the male magnetism in the country. Singer MacRae will lend his baritone brand magnetism to the show as well as offering some excellent golf at the tourney, according to Hope, who is a member of the same golf club in Hollywood.

Professional golfer Hogan, who took top place for magnetism in the sports field, will be in the tournament, of course, and also in the Parade of Champions which will be part of the big celebrities show.

Cracked Hope, when he realized he'd been left out of the list by

A Critic and a Reader Joust About Music

By Paul Hume

"WON'T YOU COME into my mailbag? It's warm, but not stuffy."

Two weeks ago we gave you an inside on our 3 a. m. telephone conversations. Today we defend the honor of critics, and the musical intelligence of the city of Washington.

Here is a letter, signed by a Washington woman versed in music. Yet she retains an outmoded conception of this city as one where musical standards are not high.

She writes, "Dear Mr. Hume." (The word "dear" has never been more of a formality.)

"I read your review of Julia Strongbow's recital in the paper Tuesday morning.

"While as music critic of The Post you are entitled to your own opinions, yet neither you nor anyone has a moral right to state what is not true verbally, still less in print, untruths derogatory to another person's reputation. To do so is to take advantage of the good faith of the reading public, quite apart from the injury done to the victim."

'Style the Purest'

"I WAS PRESENT," she continues, "at this recital and can testify (as will many others competent to judge in the audience) that Miss Strongbow never played off pitch at any time during this recital. Moreover, her style was of the purest. I have some experience in this matter, perhaps broader than your own, having heard all the greatest artists of the world for the past 50 years. If you thought her style lacked refinement and musicianship, if you found her tone not to your taste, no doubt this is due to your having been taken by surprise, having been accustomed to the rough forced tone of the violinists of Washington which would not be tolerated in Europe in any concert hall.

"This is merely a personal protest against a glaring injustice beneath the standard of a serious musican. Though I may be the only one to write to you, I am not the only one who is indignant at your vindictive article."

About the Brahms

IN REPLYING, it seemed necessary to speak most strongly about the idea that Washington does not know and appreciate the finest in music.

"My dear Mrs. W. B. J.: It is difficult for me to be moderate in replying to your letter concerning Miss Strongbow's recital.

"Let me begin with the assurance that I feel no need to justify my remarks or to detail my own musical training and experience. Why should I point out that the last performance of the Brahms D Minor Sonata I heard in Washington was by two artists of whom even you would probably approve: Zino Francescatti and Robert Casadesus."

(The Brahms was one of the sources of contention in the recital under discussion.) "I too have heard the great artists, though of only the past quarter century. The violin playing of artists admired, I believe by Miss Strongbow, has been admired by me as well. The late Ginette Neveu, Francescatti, and a host of others, have given me some idea of the kind of violin playing held in esteem in France and the rest of Europe.

Great Artists

"PERHAPS you do not feel that Heifetz, Milstein, Kreisler, Menuhin and other artists of their rank, are to be 'tolerated in Europe' but their playing in Washington has been of remarkable beauty, lacking in roughness and forced tone. And I assume that they play the same way in Europe.

"But to speak of personal matters. It is not a matter of personal opinion when an artist plays or sings off pitch. If you did not hear Miss Strongbow's frequent mishaps in intonation, that may be due to some personal adjustment on your part which makes

Two More Weeks

'Brigadoon' Rocks The Gay Old Gayety

By Richard L. Coe

WITH THE CURRENT "BRIGADOON," the Gayety now has two weeks to go to complete its 14-week season.

Considering all aspects, this amounts to a triumph. All of the shows have come out on the black side of the ledger, bookings didn't begin until the end of the theatrical year was in sight and no seasonal farewell could be happier than the lovely "Brigadoon."

Because "Brigadoon" is the heaviest production the theater has presented—and is scaled the highest—its remaining weeks are important. Fortunately, not only were all the local reviews excellent, but the musical rode in from a return New York engagement on the tide of unanimous Gotham raves.

Going over my opening week program of the Cheryl Crawford musical at New York's Ziegfeld three years ago, I find 19 more names listed in the cast than we have here. But the Gayety stage is considerably smaller, so the loss of personnel over a three-year traveling period isn't so vital as statistics might make it seem.

Money, Money

HOWEVER, probing further into the excellences of the present company, one finds that Miss Crawford is astute enough a producer to be paying none of her company less than $100 per week, well over minimum, which goes a good way toward accounting for the zest and high spirits with which the group performs. Miss Crawford was also the first producer to line up Blue Cross insurance for her entire troupe. These and other employe benefits have doubtless been an inducement to lure the lads and lassies onto the road.

And, in assaying the Gayety's batting average, the condition of the road should not be overlooked. It's not been a good road season at all. Variety estimates about a three-million-dollar drop in road receipts from last season.

The price of tickets naturally varies with the size of the theater, and though the Gayety is one of the road's smaller houses, its receipts, at least through comparative figures of Variety over a period of months, stack up as well as or better than many road towns. Of course, when a house seating 2200 plays "A Streetcar Named Desire" or "Brigadoon," the intake is correspondingly higher.

All this has real bearing on our prospects for next season here.

Baseless Report

THERE ARE discouraging factors indicated for Washington playgoers.

For some reason, there's a report current that the Gayety's not been doing too well. This, as we have seen, is not true. The remarkable thing is that, starting as late as it did, it has managed to book as solidly as it has. Baltimore has been dark for weeks and other cities have been sorely spasmodic, a factor that affects a city's playgoing habits.

Also one learns of planned try-

Swift Fingers Stitch Costumes For Historical Sesqui Drama

THE deft fingers of 21 women of Williamsburg, Va., are fast transforming thousands of yards of colorful cloth into 350 costumes that will bring spectacle and contemporary reality to Paul Green's new drama, "Faith of Our Fathers," scheduled to open in July in the Sesquicentennial Amphitheater in Rock Creek Park.

SHERMAN

These costumes were designed by the newly appointed costume designer of "Faith of Our Fathers," Mrs. Sue Sherman, who also planned the costumes for Green's "The Common Glory."

This sewing project is a family affair. It is centered around an assembly line of 15 sewing machines instead of the proverbial circle of easy rockers. In three shifts, from 9 a. m. to 10:30 p. m., these seamstresses are attacking a selected stockpile of over 4000 yards of materials, 3000 shiny buttons, and countless frilly accessories.

These ladies—six are faculty wives of William and Mary College—are working under the direction of Mrs. Sherman, an authority on historical dress design. Mrs. Sherman's coworkers are drawing heavily on the experience gained in producing the costumes for "The Common Glory" and other Colonial Williamsburg plays, for which Mrs. Sherman has designed the costumes.

Mrs. Sherman has designed 350 costumes, enough to provide two to three, and for some roles, six changes of costumes, so patterned that they can be made to fit any figure with a minimum of alteration.

Mrs. Sherman is a housewife with two children, but she brings many years of practical theatrical experience to her task. Prior to her Williamsburg associations she was costume designer at the Lawrence College Theater, Appleton, Wis., and technical director at the Provincetown (Mass.) Wharf Theater. A native of Iowa Falls, she is a graduate of the University of North Carolina and took graduate study in dramatics at Yale.

Mrs. Sherman lives in Williamsburg with her husband, Roger Sherman, lighting director for "The Common Glory."

Memo for Producers: Next Year Give Us an Extra Week

outs for fall—in other cities, not Washington.

Reports have been printed that the Theater Guild has not forgotten its lost Washington subscription list of nearly 15,000. Yet, officially, Washington hears nothing of this.

And several important voices have been heard to state that the "Washington situation" should be left as it is until fall. No one, managers, actors or public, will profit from such an attitude. Bookings have to be made early or they won't be made.

Unless, as a colleague wisely pointed out this week, we are to have some of the dreary exhibits which the National brought along, the sleazy operettas.

Which, the producers will remind you, always did make a profit.

That Wary Dollar

AND THIS brings us to the inescapable fact that for every "South Pacific" and "Death of a Salesman," the road must struggle along with lesser efforts, including, for musicals, union musicians who never, ever, watch their conductor and have trouble even reading their notes.

It also brings us to the now wary consumer dollar. When producers compare the intake at the Gayety with that since the war at the National, they forget that for some years, almost anything would make a clean sweep of the box office. Now, however, the public is wary. Talking with several box office people last week, one found that once again it's the balcony seats people are asking to pay for. They're not willing to cough up for the best in the house.

By these rambling thoughts, it's possible to see that our Washington theater is but a part of the maze of troubles besetting things theatrical. Granted, total Broadway receipts for the season will top 28 million and the road receipts will add another 20 million, so it's still a going business.

National's Future

AS FOR what the National will be doing come October, it's a good bet that the shortly-to-be renewed actor-manager contract will mean much. It's too early to take bets on that June handicap, but on it the National's future seems to depend.

And, if the managerial world is still listening, another point should be considered about Washington.

Ours is not a wealthy town. We have no industries and our people make modest salaries—the box office always goes up noticeably after Government pay days (courtesy of Congress). The Gayety observed that the second week of "Streetcar" was bigger than the first and the third bigger than the second. It's been true of all the Gayety's shows. The same seems a likely bet for "Brigadoon."

In other words, boys, when you plan for next year, cut your railroad bills by staying an extra week. Let people get used to having your wares around.

If you haven't gotten round to visiting the Gayety yourself, "Brigadoon" gives you a swell excuse. It's a gurrrrand show.

Two Plays Today

A group of young students of Valerie Warde's Drama School will give two plays this afternoon and evening in Cafritz Auditorium, 16th and Q sts. nw.

"Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" will be played by junior students at a 2 o'clock matinee and "Daddy Longlegs" will be acted by a teen-age group at 7:30.

In this afternoon's cast leading roles will be acted by Deborah Taff, Arlene Diener, Terrel Kimmel, Paul Myron, Tony Sheppard, Carolyn Ihoff, Mary Lou Gosorn, Kay McFarlin, Marjorie Miller, Margie Rabun, Halo Wines, Sam Shanklin and Ted Dyer.

The evening's leading performers include Linda Schein, Elizabeth Shanklin, Patricia Smith, George Tennyson, Carol Ryan, Mary Margaret Mueller, Giner Anne Rawley, Gantt Williams and Mary Jean Kreek.

ON RECORDS

ROSES—Sammy Kaye, RCA Victor: Sammy Kaye seems to have found a surefire formula for popularizing hillbilly ballads. He makes them sound Hawaiian. Since a pile of hay bears only a remote relationship to a grass skirt, it is difficult to justify Kaye's procedure on logical grounds, but it works. His record of "Careless Hands," for example, was one of the biggest hits of the past year; although many people hearing the twanging of the steel guitar may have bought the record thinking that it was really "Sweet Leilani." Kaye's recent release, "Roses," proves once again that he has no sympathy with Joe Cook's famous reluctance to imitate four Hawaiians.

Hillbilly ballads, like hillbillies, tend to reproduce rapidly, and "Roses" bears a marked resemblance in its lyrics to an earlier composition of the same writer, "Bouquet of Roses." The one song begins, "I'm sending you a big bouquet of roses"; the other, "Roses, I send you roses."

These being hillbilly songs, the fellow doesn't send his girl flowers simply because he thinks they'll dress up the house. The posies are as full of symbolism as the Holy Grail. "Just like my arms," say the lyrics to "Roses," "they'll open wide; you'll see my heart inside." Incidentally, this may be good poetry, but it's certainly lousy anatomy.

Actually, there is a place in our popular music literature for hillbilly ballads, if only for the reason that their lyrics are more inventive than those of the average love song. And the simplicity of their structure is well suited to Sammy Kaye's orchestra; although I would object not at all if Kaye tired of these Hawaiian hillbilly arrangements, and decided that the time had come to bid them "Aloha Oe."

FROM A DISK JOCKEY'S MEMO PAD: You may think of popcorn as something that you eat in the movies, but in Tin Pan Alley parlance "pop-corn" refers to a song like "Roses," which is suitable either for the "pop" or the "corn" artists, the corny performers being the country singers like Eddy Arnold, and the pop artists being such popular favorites as Sammy Kaye and Dick Haymes.

The Andrews Sisters are given much credit for unearthing the old song, "I Wanna Be Loved" (Decca), and Perry Como for rediscovering the beautiful Isham Jones ballad of years ago, "If You Were Only Mine" (RCA Victor). Actually, Buddy Clark, always an astute judge of songs, remembered both of these numbers and recorded them in an album he made quite a while before his death last year, long before their revival. Now Columbia has reissued these two Buddy Clark interpretations as a single record, with all proceeds going to Buddy's family.

Ever since "Rudolph, the Red Nosed Reindeer" and "Peter Cottontail" became the big hits of the Christmas and Easter seasons respectively, the songwriters have been trying to produce more songs which would appeal both to the kiddies and the adults in the family. Among the current kiddy records with grownup appeal are "Choo'n Gum" (Teresa Brewer, London); "Buffalo Billy" and "A Choc'late Ice Cream Cone" (Evelyn Knight, Decca); "I Found My Mama" (Uncle Milty Berle, RCA Victor); and, in a more serious vein, "Stars Are the Windows of Heaven" (Andrews Sisters-Guy Lombardo, Decca).

Here's Walter Winchell

June Cosmopolitan has a scoop on Gen. MacArthur's civilian job when he leaves the Army . . . "World Without Heroes" by Arthur C. Fields, a war hero, is outselling all other first-novels—four times more. It has had almost no reviewing attention, depending on "word-of-mouth" sales . . . "A Measure of Freedom," which blasts the Klan, is on the Atlanta, Ga., best-seller lists . . . In M. Levin's "The Search" he tells how he visited every concentration camp in Germany until he located a pal's mother . . . What he doesn't add is that she is now secure in Einstein's Princeton home.

OOPS! Dept.: Under the April 22 headline "Is Winchell Wrong Again?" the Pittsburgh Courier interviewed Marva Louis, the ex-wife of the former champion, adding: "She had no comment to make on W. Winchell's announcement that she would marry Dr. Albert L. Spaulding of Chicago. 'However,' she said, 'I cannot understand why everybody seems to take Mr. Winchell's word as a prayer book!' " . . . From the papers of May 22: "Ex-Mrs. Joe Louis and Dr. Albert L. Spaulding marry in Chicago."

THE Press-Box: General Clay's whimper last week about "freedom-loving Germans" came in the wake of a torrent of reports from Germany proving Nazis are riding high again . . . The same day General Clay offered that boo-hooey it was disclosed authorities there had enough evidence to indict Ilse Koch on 180 murder charges . . . But when Clay was running things in Germany he commuted the woman's sentence—insisting there was no evidence to prove she was a killer . . . The Washington Post's editorial salvo against witch-hunters last Monday (3 full columns, its entire opinion section) got deserved comment on editorial pages throughout the land. None could argue with its logic: Destroying democratic methods in the name of battling subversives—means that we have lost what we are fighting to preserve . . . That $125 million dollar loan to Peron cannot be defended on moral grounds or economic. It is a bribe. Argentina is the most prosperous nation in South America, recently giving big loans to Bolivia and Chile . . . Peron has also loaned $634 million to his chum Franco, the butcher of Barcelona.

TYPEWRITER Ribbons: M. McDonald: The sort of fine drizzle that makes a bluebird bluer . . . Anon: Egotism is the sublime opiate that deadens the pain of mediocrity . . . V. Hugo God makes woman beautiful. The devil makes her pretty . . . Margaret Cuneo: This is the month of May and the year of maybe.

Reiner Makes a Great Set Of Brandenburg Concertos

BACH: Brandenburg Concertos. Chamber Orchestra under Fritz Reiner. Columbia ML 4281-2-3. $4.96 each.

Years ago Columbia issued complete recordings of these concertos. Their albums of that time, featuring the Busch Chamber Orchestra under Adolf Busch, with Rudolf Serkin as pianist, were outstanding. They showed a respect for style, proper instrumental balance, and have never been challenged by subsequent recordings.

Now, as if to reaffirm its willingness to improve on what seemed excellent enough, Columbia has brought out something much finer. It is no discredit to the older recording to praise these new releases as beyond compare in every way.

REINER has always been known as one of the supreme musician-conductors. Here he is given the very cream of New York instrumentalists, unsurpassed engineering, and the essential refinement; a harpsichord in place of the piano.

Serkin's piano playing, notably in the fifth concerto, with the important keyboard part, was astonishing in clarity and style. Yet the piano is not the instrument Bach meant, as these records show more clearly than any words could.

Sylvia Marlowe plays the harpsichord with finesse, big phrasing, handsome registration (changing to the lute in the long cadenza), and makes the recording more exciting than any piano could.

In addition to securing the finest kind of solo and ensemble playing from his musicians, Reiner displays a thorough comprehension of the nice subtleties that make Bach live.

THE solo trumpet is wondrous to hear—the flute and violin are models. Chief praise must go to Reiner for the vigor, the nobility of his concepts. Phrasing is immaculate. The short third concerto, for strings alone, is a revelation in its electrifying bowing—each note in the rapid runs is bowed separately. The music takes on a shape and pulse we had not heard before.

With three of these records giving you the complete set of Brandenburgs, Columbia has performed one of the finest services to the cause of music. And they did it all once before!

We cannot leave the subject without mentioning Victor's Brandenburgs, since we have had calls about them. Done by Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony, they represent poor style, even some poor playing, they use piano, and the conducting is romantically un-Bachian. While we would prefer a slightly shorter ritard than Reiner uses at certain final phrases, he is flawless compared to Koussevitsky's emotional slowdown in similar spots.

HUME.

Swortzell Appointed

Lowell Swortzell has been appointed production manager for the Cross Roads Theater's coming summer season and will operate the theater for Irma Gordon Dumville, who, before her marriage last fall, had charge of the theater for many years.

To accent the Sesqui spirit of the Capital, Swortzell plans to present a group of old American hits at the barn playhouse, including "A Texas Steer" and "Peck's Bad Boy."

WATERGATE NEWS: I. OPERA:

San Carlo Opera returns to the Watergate on June 15. Eight familiar favorites will be sung there in two weeks.

Gallo's singers this season will include Gertrude Ribla, Mina Cravi, and Hizi Koyke, sopranos; Margery Mayer, contralto; Antonio Madasi, tenor, and Richard Torigi and William Wilderman, baritones.

Madasi sang the leading tenor role of Fenton, in the recent Toscanini broadcast of Falstaff. Ribla is widely heralded for dramatic roles. Cravi sang here last year, and made every appearance an occasion for highest praise. This year she will sing Micaela, Mimi and Marguerite. We hope Gallo will also cast her as Violetta.

WATERGATE NEWS: II. SYMPHONY:

A gala opening week of symphony concerts is announced by the National Symphony for its Sesquicentennial season of 12 programs.

Opening night, Sunday, July 2, Dorothy Maynor, soprano, soloist. On that same concert the male division of the Sesquicentennial Chorus will sing with the orchestra.

Wednesday evening Earl Wild will play the Tschaikowsky B Flat concerto on the all-T night. Friday night belongs to Alec Templeton, with the Grieg concerto, and his own improvisations.

More Watergate: International Folk Festival, Sunday, June 4, beginning at sundown. (Consult your almanac.)

SESQUICENTENNIAL contest: Carl Fischer, Inc., publishers, will sign a contract and publish the winning march in a contest to select the official Sesquicentennial celebration march.

Judges include Captain Curry and Major Santelmann. Entries must be in by July 15, and must be original and unpublished. For further rules and data, see the music division of the Sesqui, 1400 Pennsylvania ave. nw.

CANCELLATION: The Amsterdam Concergebouw Orchestra will not tour America this fall, and will not, therefore, play in Constitution Hall on October 1. The Hayes Concert Bureau will announce settlement of the date shortly. The tour was canceled by the orchestra's booking agency, NCAC, on grounds which sound unreasonable to us.

'Nother contest: Chicago Shinging Teachers' Guild fourteenth annual competition for the W. W. Kimball prize of $100. Setting for solo voice of Watson poem, "In June." For details, write John Toms, School of Music, Northwestern University, Evanston, Ill., and enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

National Institute of Church Music convenes in Mount Vernon Methodist Church from June 11 to June 16. Inquiries go to Box 4371, Washington 12.

'Power Without Glory'

The Washington Theater Alliance will present "Power Without Glory," by Michael Hutton, on June 8, 9 and 10 in the Arlington Farms recreation hall.

Munch Show Opens Today at Phillips

By Jane Watson Crane

WASHINGTON is fortunate to be one of the cities on the circuit of the exhibition of paintings and prints by Edvard Munch, which opens this afternoon at the Phillips Gallery. This is the first time that the assembled works of this great Norwegian artist have been seen in the United States, and display was made possible through the generosity of the Norwegian government, which lent pictures and helped to defray expenses for the project.

A half century ago Munch first stirred the hearts and minds of Europeans. His themes were the basic human ones relating to love and death. In an era when Greek goddesses and pretty pictures flourished in the art world, he dared to depict people in the grip of their emotions. Like the writings of his fellow countryman, Ibsen, his prints and canvases expressed loneliness, fear, jealousy, anxiety and sorrow.

Munch, until now very little known in the United States, is said to have been one of a small group of men who influenced the attitude of mind of a whole generation abroad. Whether, as has been said, he was one of the founders of Expressionism, he was certainly akin in spirit to the movement which followed him. He developed a distinctive style, but was never much concerned with the elements of the plastic arts as ends in themselves. What he was after was to convey his idea by the simplest and most powerful means at his command. He conceived of his individual works as part of a unified scheme to convey the natural forces of human life, a project which was never fully realized. In his less prosperous days he parted with his works of necessity, but in later years he was reluctant to let any of them leave his studio.

MUNCH was just over 80 when he died in 1944, during the Nazi occupation of his country. He left all his works (his paintings alone numbering over a thousand) to the City of Oslo. They are stored in his studio at Ekely outside the city, except for those which are now in this country. They are waiting installation in a new municipal museum which is planned for Oslo.

Munch lived and worked in Paris and Berlin. His lifetime was the era of all the isms, from Cubism to Surrealism, but he took little part in the experiments and innovations of the twentieth century.

In 1912, when he attended an exhibition in Cologne which gave prominence to his own work as an important part of the contemporary movement, he remarked to a friend "Here the wildest things in Europe are collected—I am quite faded and classic." The greatest single influence of his early life as a painter was the Norwegian artist, Christian Krohg, and later in Paris he was stimulated by the Post-Impressionists. In Germany, his attitude of mind and thought influenced the younger men who organized the Expressionist groups, but he was not closely allied to them.

Traces Career

THE MATERIAL brought to this country traces his career from early self-portraits to those done in the 1940s. Death was a preoccupation at the beginning and at the end, the "Death Chamber" depicting the family scene at the death of his older sister which occurred when he was 14, "The Self-Portrait Between the Clock and Bed" a symbolic premonition of his own demise.

Best known of his works in this country is "The Cry," which is similar in emotional power to the work of Van Gogh.

The exhibition at the Phillips will continue to June 20. It has already been seen in Boston at the Institute of Contemporary Art and at the Museum of Modern Art in New York. It will go to Chicago, St. Louis, Minneapolis, San Francisco and other cites before its close. Works of art are lent from private and public collections in Bergen and Oslo, Norway. The Committee which organized it is composed of Frederick B. Deknatel, of Harvard University, Johan H. Langaard, director of the Municipal Collections of Oslo, and James S. Plaut, of the Institute of Contemporary Art in Boston.

National 'Met' Competition Set

The Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York has announced plans for a Nation-wide competition, the results of which will be exhibited in an exhibition opening December 8, 1950.

Artists of the District and vicinity may participate by sending or delivering paintings to the Virginia Museum of Fine Arts in Richmond, on or before September 22, 1950. Jurors for this region are Leslie Cheek, director of the Virginia Museum, Lamar Dodd, head of the art department of the University of Georgia, Jerry Farnsworth, director of the Farnsworth School at Sarasota, Fla., and Charles Shannon, artist in residence at West Georgia College.

Paintings will be screened by regional juries throughout the country, the final selection for the New York show to be made by a national jury, composed of artists Francis Chapink, Howard Cook, Lamar Dodd, Ogden Pleissner, Zoltan Sepeshy, Millard Sheets, Maurice Sterne, and Esther Williams, who will serve with Robert Beverly Hale, Associate Curator of American Art at the Metropolitan.

Institute Has New Sculpture

THERE is an excellent exhibit of contemporary sculpture at the Institute of Contemporary Arts, small in number but high in quality. Included is a sensitive attenuated figure by Giacometi and some of the finest pieces by the late American, John B. Flannagan. Also shown are ceramics and paintings by students and associates of the Institute.

The Center Market City competitive show, open to amateurs and professionals in an effort to search for talent in the modern idiom, is a disappointment. Best showing in the group is by Mrs. Cornelia Yuditsky and her associates at the Creative Art Studio of Washington. Some critics believe that the use of the word "modern" militated against the project. In any event, the show on the whole falls short of expectations.

BOB HOPE IS COMING BACK!

Arthur Godfrey

Danny Kaye

Gordon MacRae

Dick Contino

Here it is again—the greatest entertainment in town—the Bob Hope National Celebrities Show, held in connection with The Washington Post National Celebrities Golf Tournament.
Godfrey's back, too! This time he's a guest and has passed his M. C. title of last year on to the nimble-witted, quick-tongued, master of repartee, Bob Hope.
Looking for a singer for the show? How about Gordon MacRae, whose meteoric rise to fame has made radio history. His crooning has the ladies on the edge of their seats.
Want still more? OK. There's Danny Kaye—a show all by himself. His take-offs on the celebrities and on golf are guaranteed to split your sides.
And that's not all! There's the Dick Contino Show which means big box office business in any league.
The grand finale features the Parade of Champions, with leading figures of the sports world to wind up the show.
Big? It's stupendous. You can't afford to miss it. Buy your tickets now, before it's too late. Remember, the proceeds are for youth activities in connection with the Attorney General's program for combating juvenile delinquency.

the Male Magnetism Institute, "They're probably picking out the older fellows first. Otherwise they'd never have left out Lover Hope."

Millions Take to Berle

FOR plain ordinary magnetism, leaving sex out of this for a minute, you've got to credit quite a few of the characters in this weekend whingding. Certainly Milton Berle, who will clown around the golf course both days, exercises some kind of pull on the population when he draws people—millions of 'em—to the TV sets of a Tuesday evening. From their daily chores, their gardening, their beering and their assorted pastimes, they flock obediently to their TV sets.

And then there's that curious phenomenon, now in its second year, by which Berle charms or magnetizes over a million dollars worth of pledges for the Runyon Cancer Fund out of the aforementioned population.

And take Danny Kaye, a comic who magnetizes the restrained Britons clear out of their shell and turned them into a rabid fan club with a strain of royal blood included. (Hope and Kaye are among the few who have been asked to play command performances for the royal family.)

And it's not hard to find people who think the National Symphony Orchestra's leader, Howard Mitchell, shows more than average magnetism. (Mitchell shows more than average golf, too, having been a junior champ in his teens.)

In the realm of strictly Washington-type celebrities, there's a batch of Congressmen and officials scheduled to play and nobody ever accused a good politician of lacking magnetism. It he hasn't got that, he's no politician.

All Pay Own Expenses

FOR most of the players in this big benefit tournament, coming here involves some sacrifice. They all pay their own expenses and for anybody who is making the trek across the country, that ain't, as they say, alfalfa.

For Hope, beside the expenses which don't seem to bother him, it means coming clear back East after a couple of weeks of skipping all over the map. But that doesn't seem to bother him either. After doing his radio show from the West Coast Tuesday, Hope flew to New York to rehearse his second television show which was aired last night. Today he flies to Chicago for a benefit performance. Monday he plays golf in Kansas City with Byron Nelson for the cerebral palsy fund. Tuesday back to Hollywood to do his radio show. Wednesday he heads East again for The Washington Post's golf tournament and the show.

But he loves the whole cross-country race. "Could I or would I go on like this day after day if I didn't get a lift out of it?" he asks.

Godfrey had to cancel a fishing date in Miami. "The fish will just have to wait. I got to see my pals in Washington," he says.

For Hogan, who still has to limit his tournament appearances because of injuries received in a nearly fatal automobile accident, appearing in this tournament means appearing in one less professional tournament—and that's pocketbook sacrifice.

The pretty Bauer sisters, Marlene and Alice, who recently turned professional, also give up a nice tournament fee they could have been earning elsewhere this weekend. But they're coming.

For the spectators, the financial sacrifice is smaller and there's no work involved. Tickets for the golf tournament are $2.40 each day or $3.60 for both days for adults, and $1.20 each day for children.

Tickets to the Hope show (with all those magnetic males) are $5, $4, $3 and $2. All tickets are available in the lobby of The Washington Post, at the Fairway Sports Shop, 1328 G st. nw., and the Champion Sports Shop, 816 13th st. nw.

it possible for you to hear correct pitches when they are not being played.

"But for you, my Dear Mrs. J., to presume to suggest that I write in The Washington Post something that is not true, is an arrogance quite the equal of that you ascribe to me.

'Misconception'

"MAY I ADD that the point of view expressed in your letter, that Washington does not know the finest musical standards, and tolerates artists who would not be welcome in Europe, is a conceit and misconception as great as any I know in the field. Nor can it be substantiated with facts for a second.

"I should be most interested in hearing from you again on this matter. Need I assist you in thinking about the matter by recalling that the world's leading orchestras, chamber ensembles, and solo artists are heard here regularly. Or perhaps you quarrel with the playing of the Moyse Trio, the Budapest, Paganini, London, and Hungarian quartets.

"Possibly you do not like the playing of the French National Orchestra, or the music made by Koussevitsky, Walter, and Ansermet. The singing of a Jennie Tourel may not satisfy you, but in that event, I can only envy your splendid isolation from the most subtle, exquisite artistic performances of our time—and performances which we know are the equal of those great days in past years, when more artists held to such high standards as now only a few attain."

We regret that Mrs. J has not replied in defense of her charges.

Radio Relays Taking Place of Lines, Poles

By Wayne Oliver

NEW YORK (AP).—Radio beams hopping from horizon to horizon along lonely hilltop towers 15 to 30 miles apart promise to replace the long familiar telephone poles and wires on our landscape.

These electronic couriers, called microwaves, are practically immune to the hazards that beset wire lines.

With fabulous capacity for carrying telephone and telegraph messages, television and other forms of communications, radio relays are being used to an increasing extent in place of overhead wires and underground cables.

The American Telephone & Telegraph Co. already is making extensive use of radio relay in its Bell System television network. Western Union uses a triangular radio relay hookup to connect New York, Washington and Pittsburgh. Private radio relay systems are being built by railroads, oil and gas pipeline companies, electric power systems and other industries.

The world's longest private radio relay system, costing nearly one million dollars and stretching 1840 miles, is being built for Transcontinental Pipe Line Corp. between Mercedes, Tex., and New York. General Electric, which is building the equipment, says it will be in operation from New York to Houston by November 15 and all the way to Mercedes by March, 1951.

Backbone of TV Web

THE BIGGEST of all, to be operated as a common carrier, will be the Bell System's coast-to-coast radio relay hookup, due to become the the backbone of its Nation-wide television network facilities.

A Boston-New York link has been in operation over two years. The New York to Chicago portion is nearing completion and is due to go into service in late summer. An extension to Omaha will start operating in October. From Omaha, the next leg will extend westward to Denver, Salt Lake City and San Francisco, with completion due late next year or early 1952. A link between San Francisco and Los Angeles goes into service this fall.

The Bell System has a number of shorter radio relay links in operation or under construction.

Television stations make extensive use of microwave relay equipment for broadcasts of sports contests and other special events from remote locations. Motion picture theaters have asked for special air channels on which to operate radio relay circuits for special theater television hookups.

Super High

RADIO RELAY SYSTEMS use super high frequencies called microwaves. It is because they behave much like light waves that they can be focused into beams. And for the same reason, they travel in straight lines. They will not follow the earth's curvature; thus the spacing of towers on hilltops from 15 to 30 miles apart—usually about 25 miles. One tower is always within the line of sight of the tower next along the route.

The microwaves are about as long as a cigarette. Some four to eight billions of them pass a given point in a second. The frequencies are far above those used for radio broadcasts, television broadcasts or telephone messages. The beams act as carriers for whatever form of communication you put on them. A single beam may carry many separate circuits, with electrical filters on the receiving end connecting you to the particular one you want.

A. T. & T. contends there is as yet not enough data to prove conclusively that radio relay will be cheaper than its famous underground coaxial cables, that also can carry television as well as hundreds of telephone conversations.

But William Balderston, president of Philco, declares:

"Because of the lower initial cost, as well as reduced operating and maintenance charges, of microwave radio relays as compared with pole-and-line wires, we are convinced that in the future such beamed-radio communications systems may replace overhead telephone lines."

Pioneer Museum Opens

Cherokee, N. C.—New tourist attractions in the Great Smokies are mushrooming. The Pioneer Museum at the Oconaluftee Ranger Station, on the highroad to Clingman's Dome from Cherokee, opened in April. Plans are to have the museum open seven days a week during July, August and September and five days—Wednesday through Sunday—during the other months. Last year 91,000 persons visited the museum.

Whistle Stopping

Let's Put That Ship On a New Schedule

By Orval Hopkins

WELL, I AM TRAVELING HOME on the bus the other eve, gently taking issue with several dozen items I see in the pm's, or afternoon papers, and trying to work up an elderly flirtation with some of the working girls on the bus, when wha' hoppen but the bus stops.

We are on the 14th st. bridge, bound for Virginia, and the gate is up. Coming down the stream is a large tug, or a small oiler, I don't know which. She is doing three, maybe four, knots. I am unable to see into her pilot house, but there can't be more than four persons aboard.

It is at the peak of the evening traffic. I am on something the Arnold Line calls an express bus. That means it's supposed to get there fast, with a minimum of stops. So this tub wanders down the river and up goes the draw on the 14th st. bridge. Likewise, on the new northbound bridge. Cars pile up on my end clear back to the Bureau of Engraving. On the other side they pile up maybe over to the Pentagon. Ten, 15 minutes or so we sit there while this bucket pokes through the bridges. Four people and one small vessel holding up some hundreds of cars and maybe thousands of people, which their wives want to know what's holding them up.

Why can't they send this wreck down the river to wherever it goes at some other hour? Before the peak of the traffic, say. Or after. Or saw the stack off the thing, so it can creep under the bridge and they won't have to open the gates.

THE BIG speedboat regatta at Ocean City, N. J., starts at 1 p.m. Tuesday, if you're the speedboat type and if heading Jersey way. Joe Van Blerck is back with his Aljo to defend the trophy, on which he already has two legs (that almost seems enough).

OCEAN CITY, MD., is boasting about its fishing again. "A roe sturgeon was caught in the pound nets of Simpson Bros. on May 21," reports the bureau of information. "Herbert Redden brought in three large rock today, all averaging eight to nine pounds. Bay fishing has been under way for several weeks, with the anglers getting bass, perch, flounders and kingfish."

A "MISS NEPTUNE" will present the "key to the Atlantic Ocean" to Supt. Dick Hughes of the Atlantic City Beach patrol on Memorial day and the swimming season will be officially begun. Anyway, that's what it says here.

THE MARYLAND House and Garden Pilgrimage reports that new high record attendances were set by its 12-day 1950 series of 15 tours in which more than 200 noted houses and gardens were opened to the public in 11 different counties of the State. More than 8000 people representing every State and Canada, England, Brazil, Mexico, Denmark and Cuba made the visit. About 7500 made it last year, MHGP says . . . Austria is expecting 50,000 visitors from the United States this year . . . American horsemen will compete in jumping events at the International Horse Show in London in July. The king and queen will be present, according to the British Travel Association.

THE BRITISH, incidentally, have got out a "go-as-you-please" ticket which is good for an unlimited number of rides for a period of seven days on London's subways, buses and trolleys. It costs $3.50 and can be bought only in the United States.

This lassie is testing the temperature of the Atlantic at Point Pleasant, N. J. The water along Jersey's 120-mile coastline will be officially "unlocked" on Memorial Day

Arlington Trip Heads Park List for Today

A HISTORICAL tour of Arlington National Cemetery and Lee Mansion will be conducted from 2:30 to 4:30 p. m. today. The tour will begin at the Memorial entrance to the cemetery, which can be reached via A.B.&W. bus from 12th st. and Pennsylvania ave. nw.

An astronomy outing in Fort Reno Park, 40th and Chesapeake sts., nw., will be held from 8:30 to 10:30 tonight. Members of the National Capital Astronomers Club will provide telescopes and assist in the event.

"Pond creatures" will be studied from 3 to 5 p. m. today at the Kenilworth Aquatic Gardens. The party will assemble at the parking area to the gardens near Douglas st. and Kenilworth ave. ne.

Park Naturalist W. Drew Chick, jr., will lead a bird walk from 7 to 8:30 a. m. today along the C. & O. Canal towpath. The group will meet at Stop 24 (Brookmont, Md.) on the Cabin John carline.

Barge trips on the C. & O. Canal will be made from Lock 3, on 30th st. one block south of M st., at 2 p. m. and from Lock 5, Brookmont, Md. at 4 p. m. today. Lock 5 is near Stop 24 on the Glen Echo carline. Tickets can be purchased at the barge.

Blooms Greet Oregon Visitor

SALEM, ORE.—Spring flowers in the valleys and by the sea spread colorful welcomes for early season visitors to Oregon.

Along the coast in spring, the misty-blue lilac keeps company with glistening dogwood, heralding the approach of rhododendron and azalea time. So characteristic of the southwestern countryside are the azaleas, that a festival is held each May at Brookings to honor the fragrant blooms

At Florence, some distance north, a rhododendron festival is held each year. On the northern Oregon coast, the same is done for Scotch Broom, which has blazed a golden trail the length of the coast.

Then there are the smaller plants on seashore sands the purple beach pea, lavender and yellow lotus, yellow and pink sand verbena and blue lupines. These are supplemented by salal and wax myrtle.

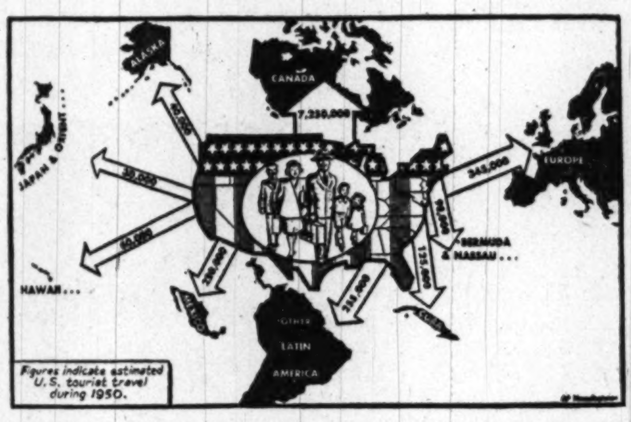
The famed Columbia River gorge and its scenic highway route show off other Oregon floral resources. There are countless magenta, shooting stars, grass widows, blue-eyed grass, purple larkspur and white bleeding hearts, to mention a few.

Throughout the State in the Cascade Mountains, the Wallowas, the high plateaus, the foothills and the valleys—flowers are abundant. Then there are the domestic flowers of carefully selected stocks, of which the rose is most famous. Each year in June—this year from June 7 to 11—Portland pays tribute to these sweet-scented blooms with a rose festival. In late July, Grants Pass pays honor to the gladiolus with a festival.

U. S. Foreign Travel Heads for Record

By Alexander R. George

TRAVEL by U. S. residents to western Europe and nearby areas of the Western Hemisphere is expected to reach record volumes in 1950. The map shows unofficial estimates for traffic to some but not all tourist frequented areas.



American foreign travel expenditures are figured to run far higher than the 695 million dollars estimated by the Department of Commerce to have been spent in 1949.

Some travel authorities see a possibility that American travel to western Europe and the Mediterranean area may surpass the all-time high mark of travel by U. S. citizens to all parts of Europe. The record is 359,000 visitors from the United States in 1930, when virtually all of Europe was accessible to tourists.

The International Travel Division of the American Automobile Association has estimated that from 350,000 to 400,000 Americans will visit Europe this year. The Department of Commerce estimate is from 300,000 to 345,000.

Canada will hold its place as the No. 1 foreign destination of U. S. tourists. The AAA reports that our northern neighbor is expecting 7,250,000 visitors from this country in 1950.

Latin America

SOME 600,000 U. S. residents are expected to travel to Latin American countries this year. Mexico will have an estimated 220,000 visitors from the United States, and Cuba about 125,000.

American travelers spent 280 million dollars in Canada in 1949, by far the largest amount of U. S. tourist dollars ever spent in any single country. Mexico rated second with 135 million dollars spent there by visitors from this country.

The Department of Commerce estimates that American travelers in Europe this year will spend about 220 million dollars while abroad. It is figured they will spend some 93 million dollars for fares on carriers of European nations, making the total expenditures 313 million dollars.

Travel expenditures by Americans in the West Indies and Central America during 1949 were estimated by the Department of Commerce at 57 million dollars, compared with 52 million dollars in 1948 and a prewar high of 40 million dollars in 1930.

Expenditures in South America increased from an estimated 10 million dollars in 1937 to an estimated 22 million dollars in 1949. The increase in business dealings with South America during the past decade has been responsible for a portion of the increase in travel. Growth of air transportation has made South America more accessible.

Holy Year, Too

THIS year's boom in travel to Europe is attributed to the Holy Year celebration, some reduction in prices on account of currency devaluation, and improved tourist accommodations. Advertising and publicity of European nations seeking more American dollars is also a factor.

It has been reported that almost all available summer steamship space for Europe-bound travelers has been sold out. This creates the need, say travel observers, for extending the travel season into the autumn to attract Americans when steamship space is in greater supply.

Russell E. Singer, vice president of the American Automobile Association, says that off-season travel offers the advantages of lower rates, less crowding, and greater opportunity to visit interesting places and to meet the people of Europe.

"To really develop mass year-round travel, Europe faces, the challenge of reaching the market of middle-income Americans," Singer says. "The potential is unlimited because fully 15 million American families have incomes between $3000 and $6000."

"The Department of Labor estimates that between 36 million and 38 million wage earners and salary workers are eligible for vacations with pay. If even a small percentage of these Americans was induced to travel to Europe, the effect on global economy would be tremendous."

British Colonies Stamps Given Only to Established Dealers

By William M. Stuart

STUART

CROWN AGENTS for the British Colonies have recently been authorized to supply postage stamps to only established stamp dealers. British Colonies issues are among the most popular of stamps and many philatelists question the action of the Crown Agents in announcing new regulations. Collectors of these British items are forced to purchase from dealers selected by the British Agents and there is no other method of securing them. Orders must be sent to London, whence the stamps will be forwarded to Crown Agents in Washington. Delivery to purchasers in the United States and Canada will be made on receipt of remittance. The cost will be face value plus a charge of ¼ percent (minimum charge of $1.50) on each order for each territory, payable in United States dollars at the Washington office.

It seems that stamps stocked by the Crown Agents are generally the latest printings, but the Crown Agents cannot supply a specified printing, to match perforations, shades, etc., or complete sheets or portions of a sheet. Separate orders must be submitted for the stamps of each territory. Stamps may be supplied only in multiples of 10. The proposition is entirely new and it is problematical how American collectors will react.

THE 3-cent stamp honoring the Boy Scouts of America will be released at Valley Forge, Pa., on June 30, in connection with the second National Jamboree of the scout organization. The stamp will be arranged horizontally, printed by rotary process and issued in sheets of 50. The initial printing calls for 125 million stamps. In the left-center of the stamp is a group of three boys, typifying the three age level programs of the Scouts, exploring, boy scouting and cub scouting. To the right, in the background, is a reproduction of the Statute of Liberty, symbolizing the scouts' crusade to "Strengthen the Arm of Liberty." In the right center appears the membership badge above which is the wording "On my honor I will do my best" and below "Boy Scouts of America." At the bottom of the stamp in the extreme lower left corner is the denomination "3c" in a circle. The model was sketched by Charles R. Chickering. The vignette was engraved by Charles A. Brooks and the lettering, numerals and frame engraved by Edward H. Helmuth. First day covers will be supplied by the Postmaster, Valley Forge, Pa.

On June 1, air mail service will be inaugurated on route AM-27 at Laconia, N. H.; Berlin, N. H., Brunswick, Me., Rockland, Me., and New London, Conn. Effective on the same date service will be resumed at Bar Harbor, Me., and no cachet will be authorized. Special cachets will be applied to covers at Laconia, Berlin, Brunswick, Rockland and New London.

Austria issued its first adhesive postage stamp just 100 years ago and to honor this centenary a stamp has been issued, a 1-schilling, black and yellow, reduced reproduction of the 2-kreuzer issued in 1850, its first postage stamp. This first stamp was printed in black.

Those interested in cancelations may obtain a number by sending self-addressed prepaid envelopes to the appropriate postmasters requesting that the special cancelation be applied: Los Angeles and San Francisco, Calif.; Washington, D. C.; Miami, Fla.; Atlanta, Ga.; Chicago, Ill.; Boston, Mass.; Detroit, Mich.; New York, N. Y.; Dallas, Texas, and Richmond, Va.

AT the meeting of the Collectors Club, Branch 5, S. P. A., Tuesday evening in Pythian Temple, John D. Pope 3d, spoke on the Bank Note issues of United States stamps. He displayed several frames and discussed the issues from 1870 to 1888, going into detail as to papers, errors, colors, etc. Owing to the holiday, Memorial Day, the regular meeting on Tuesday will be omitted. The next meeting will be held on Tuesday, June 6, when an auction will be held, at Pythian Temple, 1012 9th st. nw.

Paris in Spring Is Just a Pain to Some

By William Richardson

PARIS (U.P.).—Paris in the spring may be paradise to millions, but to American consular officials the first budding of the chestnut trees on the Champs Elysees spells the start of the headache season.

"Americans," one of them said the other day, "can get in as much stupid trouble per capita as any people on the face of the earth, and they can get into more trouble in Paris than anywhere else."

Citing the greatest pitfalls for the thousands of tourists who already have begun their annual migration to France, he listed:

1. Attempts to evade French currency regulations.
2. Refusal to cooperate with French customs and financial officials.
3. Big-time operators who want to make a killing on a black market which no longer exists and therefore go broke.
4. Screwballs who swarm to Paris one jump ahead of a straight-jacket and often get sent home in one.

Scores of Americans every year succumb to what may be called politely "Paris fatigue." And scores of them are sent back to the States, this official disclosed.

"It seems that everybody in America with screwball tendencies and the price of a plane ticket comes inevitably to Paris," he said. "Once they get here, they blow their tops.

"All sorts of unsettled characters, but mostly the old Greenwich Village types who fancy themselves Bohemians.

"You get the lovelorn types who come to Paris for a big fling," the official said. "The drunks who still think Paris is something out of a World War I novel. The strain is just too much for them."

When an American cracks up he is usually sent to the American hospital for observation until the embassy's welfare department can get in touch with his relatives back in the States. Then he or, more often, she—is sent back home.

The embassy's greatest problem with visiting Americans is those who come over without sufficient money or lose it.

"What most people don't realize," the embassy official said, "is that the Government has absolutely no appropriation to help Americans who are stranded abroad."

Fine Summer Fishing

Some of the best of Miami Beach's famous fishing is to be had during spring and summer.

The Indians Play Rough In Western Panama

COMES spring, and the primitive Guaymi Indians of Chiriqui Province, western Panama, gather for their big annual ceremony known as the "balseria."

The balseria, attracting 3000 or more of Panama's mountain tribesmen, has obvious social aspects. It has religious implications, too, concerned primarily with bringing about good crops, as these Indians are farmers as well as hunters and fishers.

The most striking phase of the balseria, however, is its endurance contest between opposing groups, sort of a mayhem marathon, according to Matthew W. Stirling, chief of the Bureau of American Ethnology of the Smithsonian Institution. Dr. Stirling, one of the few outsiders ever to witness the affair, describes the strenuous festival in a report on the latest National Geographic Society - Smithsonian Institution archeological expedition to Panama.

From the little mountain village of Tole, just north of the Pan-American highway in western Panama, Dr. Stirling and his party traveled by horseback over rough trails to the isolated site.

All the Guaymi men, women and children were elaborately painted and costumed. Most of the men wore headdresses of macaw feathers or of the brilliant metallic green tail feathers of the quetzal.

In these ceremonies the Indians living near the chosen site act as hosts and constitute one group. The visiting Indians from the other side of the mountain are the guests and constitute an opposing group. They team off into smaller groups in various contests.

The principal contest is one in which a 6-foot log of balsa wood is alternately thrown from close range by the contestants of one team at the shins of their opponents. "Etiquette requires that when one is struck, no indication of pain be given," Dr. Stirling said.

Fist-fighting is another approved form of the vigorous competitions. Challenges are given and accepted as individuals of the opposing groups pair off. The contestants fight viciously with bare fists until one is completely incapacitated.

Fists and balsa poles are thus thrown uninterruptedly, although in relays, for a period of 48 hours, day and night. No less continuous is the din maintained by thousands of Indians singing, shouting, and blowing on conch shell horns, bamboo flutes, and wax whistles. Chicha, the native corn liquor, plays its part.

The endurance and capacity for punishment displayed by the Indians in these affairs seem almost incredible to a person from a civilized community, Dr. Stirling observed. The entire balseria is looked forward to by the Indians with great pleasure, however, for they regard it the best time they have during the year.

May 30 Plans At Wildwood

WILDWOOD, N. J.—A Memorial Day program will be held at Wildwood with Coast and National Guard units participating in the procession and with Representative T. Millet Hand of Cape May as principal speaker.

The program will begin at 9 a. m., when the V. F. W. will conduct a public memorial service at Memory Lane.

Edward J. Nestor will be master of ceremonies at the exercises to be held on the beach. Memorial services for the fallen heroes of all wars will take place at 4 p. m. A floral boat will be launched at 4:20, and firing squads will take part, with the Coast Guard boat cooperating.

The parade will be featured by school children and Girl and Boy Scouts from Greater Wildwood participating.

The Rev. T. Atwood Smith, the Rev. J. F. Peak, the Rev. Theodore M. Carter, the Rev. Edmund M. Aherne and the Rev. Louis Hoffman will take part in the program.

The Coast Guard Auxiliary Band, V. F. W. Drum and Bugle Corps, Wildwood and Cape May high school bands and the Lower Township Consolidated School band will furnish music.

Bill Cooper Next At Virginia Beach

Virginia Beach, Va.—Second band scheduled to play on the show-boat deck of Sidney Bank's Cavalier Beach and Cabana Club at Virginia Beach will be Bill Cooper and his orchestra. Cooper who played here last summer, bows in June 1 for a two-week engagement.

Cooper, an NBC artist, has played at New York's St. Regis, Biltmore and Commodore Hotels.

Greyhound racing begins for the summer season with the opening of the Cavalier Greyhound Racing Track on June 9 with pari-mutal betting.

Staten Island Ferry Rates High With Lover of N. Y. C.

By M. C. Blackman

NEW YORK, (NYHT).—As a shameless, past-middle-age lover of New York City, I usually conserve my wandering energies during the unrewarding winter months and wait until spring to resume my heavy courtship.

Spring, for me, begins on the day that I can sit in comfort on the terrace of the cafeteria at the Central Park Zoo with my wife and a couple of like-minded friends while drinking beer, and then enjoy a late afternoon ride on the Staten Island Ferry.

I am sentimental about this, to the great dismay of visiting firemen. They read Edna St. Vincent Millay years ago and wouldn't be caught dead within half a mile of a ferry slip. As for me, I visited a roadhouse near Hot Springs, Ark., years ago, and wouldn't be caught dead in the same street with a night club, where our visitors usually want to go.

Just Before Sunset

THE best time to begin the longest-ocean-voyage-in-the-world-for a nickel is just before sunset. True, that is the rush hour in the spring, but the ferry rush is not like that of the subways. The crowd flows forward in gentle surges toward "next boat" and if you get into the rhythm you can keep your dignity and inches of space around you.

Once on the capacious ferry, the home-goers move forward or inside, leaving outside seats at the stern for the pleasure riders.

The Statute of Liberty is far more splendid in silhouette against the late evening sky than in the midday or morning sun, and there is no better view of it than from a Staten Island ferry.

Surely, those gulls must be trained or bribed by the chamber of commerce to give delight to sightseers. There is no apparent reason why they should follow the ferry for 5 miles down the bay, but they do, a dozen or a score of them—dipping, wheeling and soaring gracefully, maintaining the same steady speed as the ferry with only an occasional flap of their wings.

And what a backdrop for their performance! The skyline of lower Manhattan bathed in late afternoon sunlight is a sight calculated to give a farm-born bumpkin like me the galloping shivers. That was the way I first saw New York (from a Jersey ferry), and I never got over it. Moreover, I don't want to.

Skip One at St. George

AT ST. GEORGE, if you skip one ferry while wolfing a couple of frankfurters (salt air gives one such an appetite), night will have fallen for the return voyage.

It is now a bit chilly for the open deck, so you stand at the forward window of the upper deck cabin. The lighted towers of Manhattan make a picture postcard at first and, as the ferry approaches, they grow and grow until they fill the window and, finally, the whole horizon.

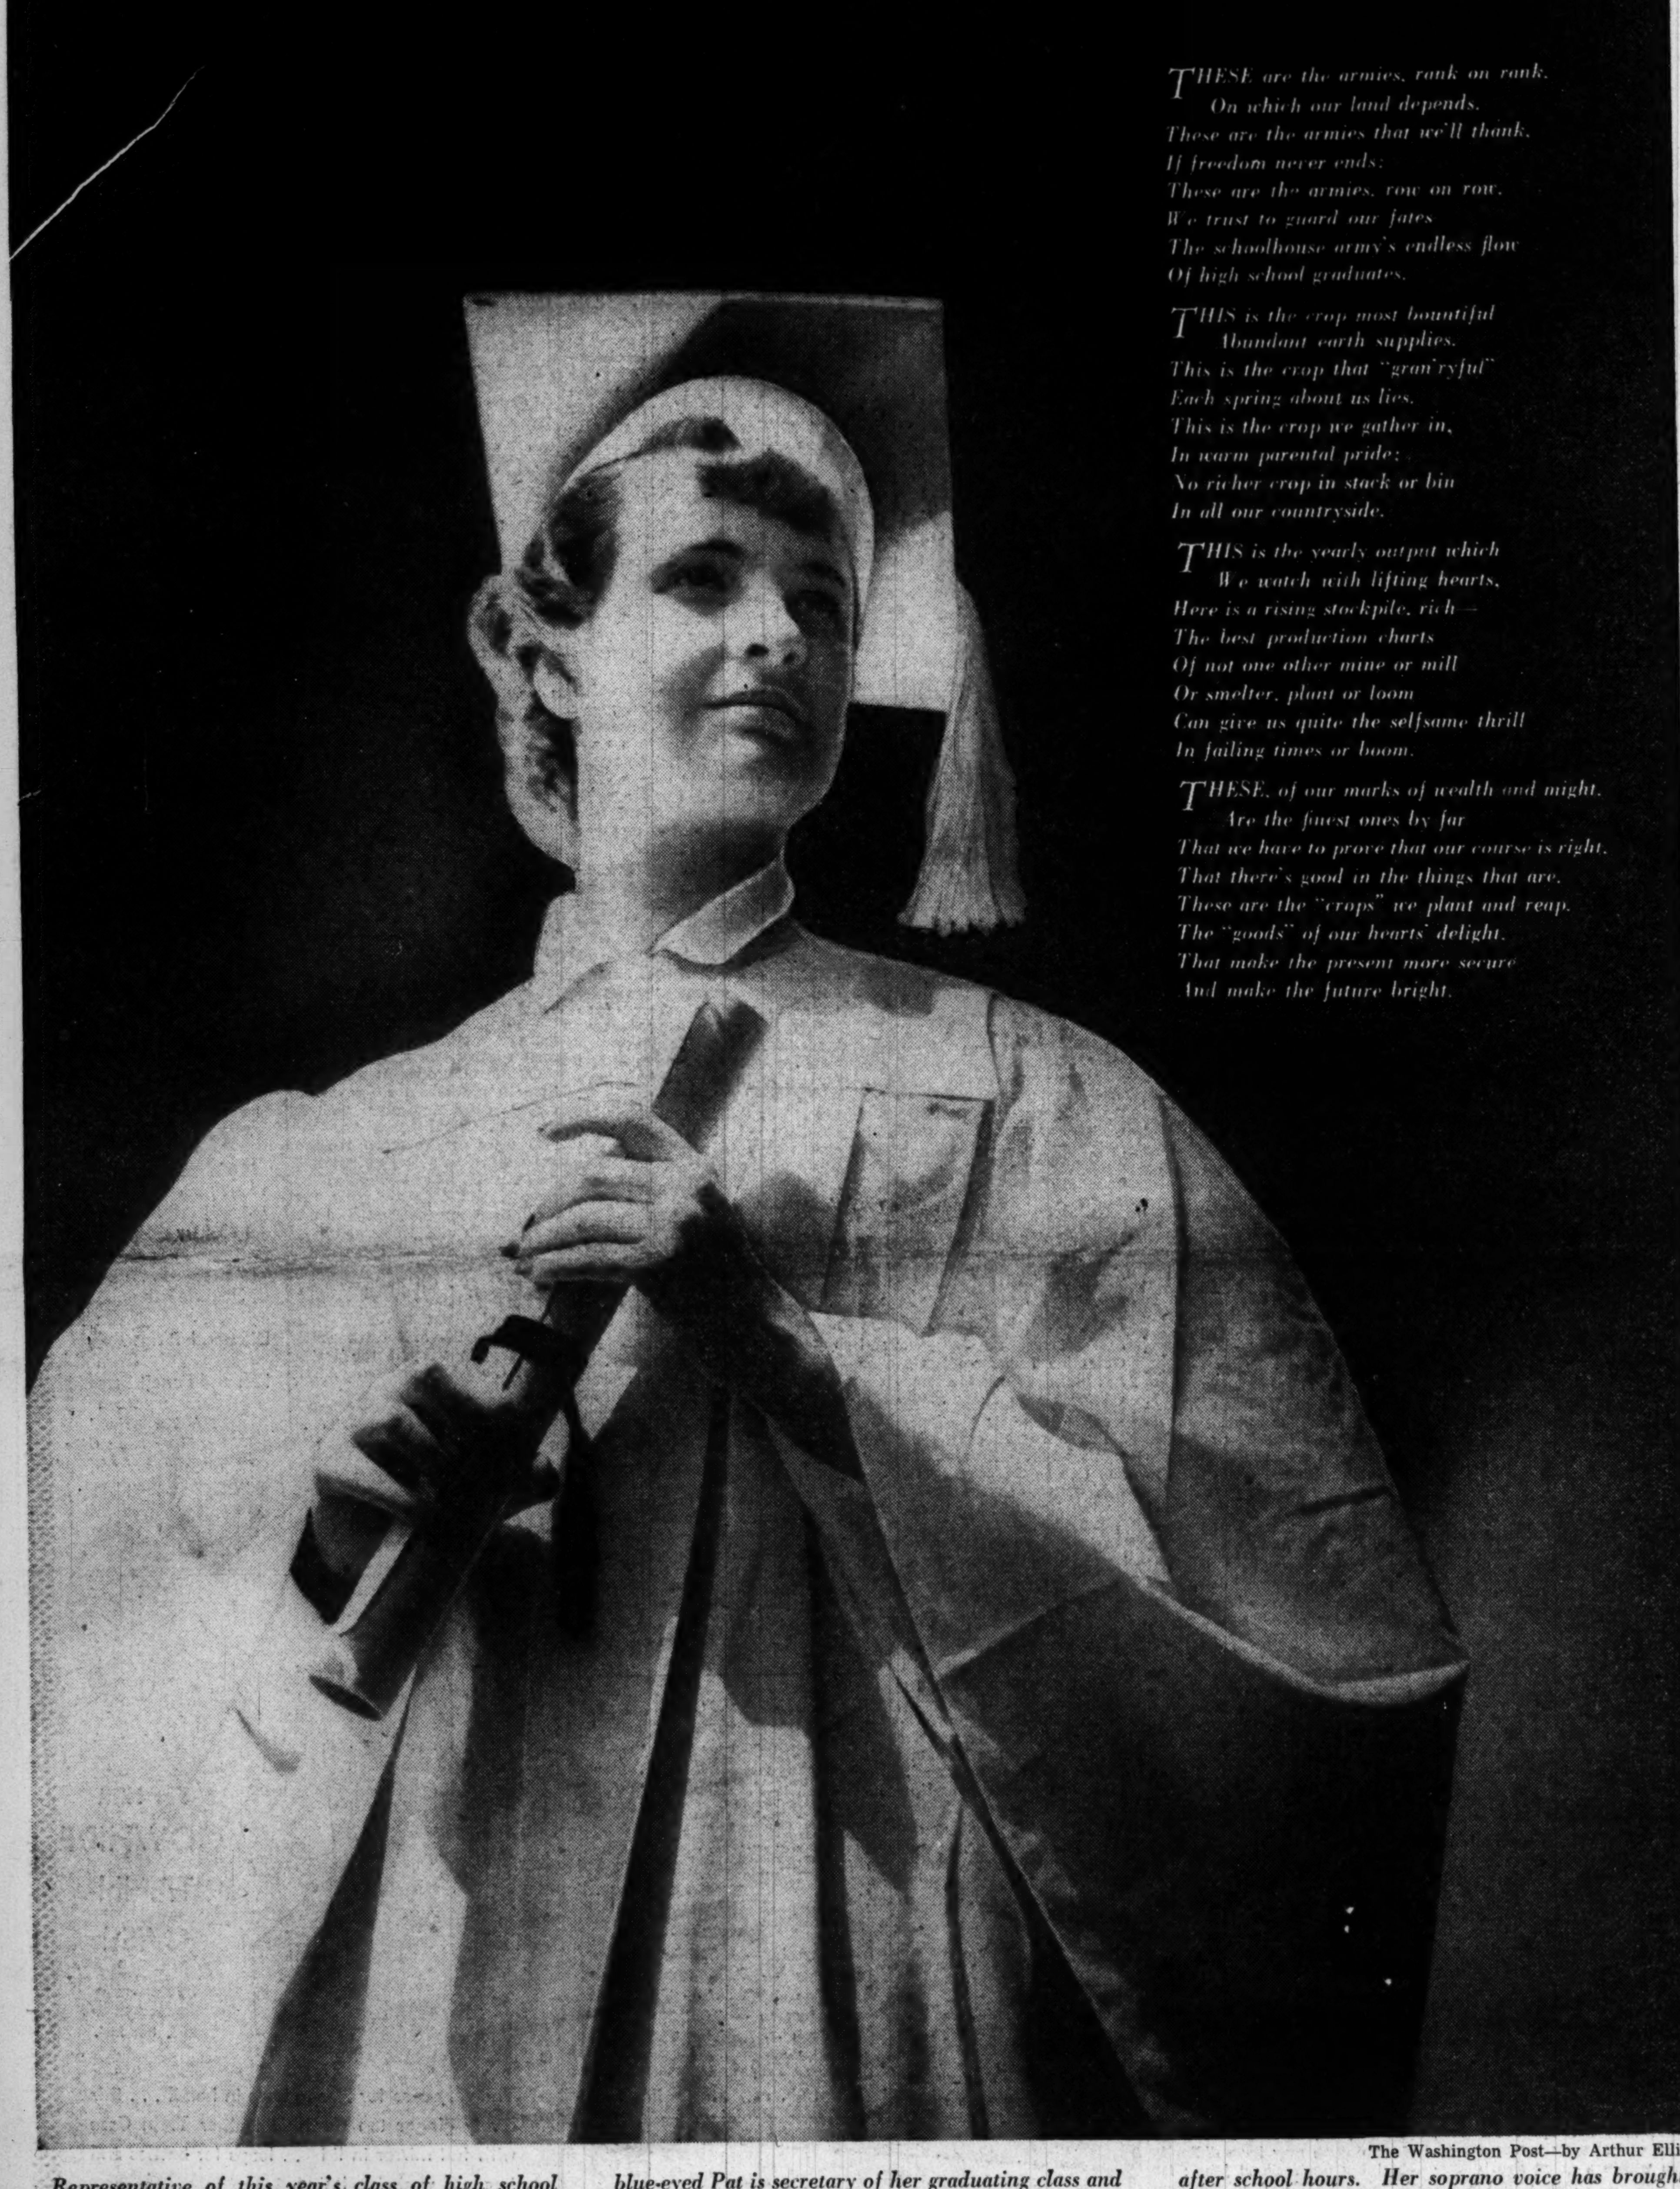
SECTION VII | GRADUATION TIME
College Choices

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON: SUNDAY, MAY 28, 1950

GRADUATION TIME
Job Opportunities | SECTION VII

COMMENCEMENT, 1950



THESE are the armies, rank on rank,
On which our land depends.
These are the armies that we'll thank,
If freedom never ends:
These are the armies, row on row,
We trust to guard our fates
The schoolhouse army's endless flow
Of high school graduates.

THIS is the crop most bountiful
Abundant earth supplies.
This is the crop that "gran'ryful"
Each spring about us lies.
This is the crop we gather in,
In warm parental pride:
No richer crop in stack or bin
In all our countryside.

THIS is the yearly output which
We watch with lifting hearts,
Here is a rising stockpile, rich—
The best production charts
Of not one other mine or mill
Or smelter, plant or loom
Can give us quite the selfsame thrill
In failing times or boom.

THESE, of our marks of wealth and might,
Are the finest ones by far
That we have to prove that our course is right,
That there's good in the things that are.
These are the "crops" we plant and reap,
The "goods" of our hearts' delight,
That make the present more secure
And make the future bright.

The Washington Post—by Arthur Ellis

Representative of this year's class of high school graduates is 18-year-old Elsye Patricia Sherzer, 1500 V st. se., senior at Anacostia High School. Blonde, blue-eyed Pat is secretary of her graduating class and interhigh student council representative. A tall girl, 5 feet 7 inches, she models for a department store after school hours. Her soprano voice has brought her leads in school musicals and numerous outside engagements

Half Going on to College

Graduation of 6500 A New Record Here

By Elsie Carper
Post Reporter

WITHIN the next few weeks more than 6500 students in the Greater Washington area will receive high school diplomas. This midcentury class will be the largest ever to be graduated from public, private and parochial schools in this community.

The graduation picture is the same elsewhere in the Nation. High schools with record breaking enrollments will graduate more than a million and a quarter students.

What will happen to these graduates, who with high purpose set out, diploma in hand?

MISS CARPER

A poll of high school graduates in the Washington area shows that about half hope to continue their education in college or in one of the technical schools. The remainder will be looking for jobs.

The high school-trained youth who goes to work will find that he has graduated into a buyers' market. Articles prepared by specialists for this commencement section of The Washington Post indicate that the graduate will have to look long and hard to find suitable employment.

Competition for available jobs will be stiffer than it was last year and employers will be able to pick and choose. The high school student will have to compete with the nearly 8500 college students who also will be graduated from schools in this area this spring.

Welcome Mat Out at Colleges

THE STUDENT who goes to school will have a better chance than his brother or sister who graduated a year or two ago of getting into the college of his choice. The ranks of GIs that in the past four years pushed college enrollments to unprecedented numbers are thinning out. Colleges again are recruiting students.

The guidance experts say that the high school graduate preparing to enter college in the fall should give careful thought to his major, picking one that will train him for a field not yet overcrowded. They warn the student against law and engineering and even medicine because of the difficulty of gaining admittance to a medical school.

Looking at these gloomy prospects, the high school graduate might well be depressed. Fortunately, though, at this crucial point in his life he is an optimist. A barrier is a challenge.

The Will to Succeed

THE ARTICLES written by students for this commencement section show that the high schools have instilled in the individual graduate a will to succeed. He is eager to maintain the traditions and bring honor to his school.

The Cavalier Daily, the University of Virginia publication, recently polled a group of the Nation's leaders to determine what are the chances of success for the 1950 graduate as compared to opportunities which existed for the graduates of from 20 to 50 years ago.

Success, it seems, still is a matter of individual initiative. Baseball's Connie Mack summed it up this way:

"You can't keep a good man down. Ability will out, now just as it always has in the past."

Ever-Thinning Circle Gets Thru College

By Paul F. Douglass
President, The American University

MOST YOUNG Americans don't graduate from college. Those who do belong to a thinning circle of accumulating influence. Going on to college from high school is therefore the exception rather than the rule. College selects the best and prepares them for greater usefulness.

DR. DOUGLASS

Let's look at the figures. Out of each 1000 boys and girls enrolled in the fifth grade, only 51 graduate from college. When you finish college, therefore, you have made yourself the one person who finished against the 20 who were with you in the fifth grade.

Where did your classmates go? Well, 147 dropped out before completion of the eighth grade, 803 entered high school, 336 dropped our before graduation and 129 entered college. During the four years of college, 79 of those who entered dropped out, and only 51 were graduated.

You see, college screens young people. By going to college you become a part of that thinning circle of accumulating influence. You become a select person because you stuck to your purpose, persisted in your studies and had the ability to take advantage of your opportunities.

At American University, we wanted to find out what college really means in life. We polled our graduates between 1926 and 1946 to find out what courses had meant the most to them. The answers were (1) Modern History and (2) English Literature, Composition, and speech.

Helping Them to Live

WE WANTED to know how the college education helped our graduates to live. Here is the composite pattern of their answers in the order which the graduates ranked their own thinking:

1. College helped me to understand human living. It broadened my interests, pushed out my horizons, integrated experience with backgrounds, awakened appreciation, developed flexibility, and made life more understandable.

2. College improved my human relations. It developed my capacity to get along with other people with all kinds of backgrounds, increased my tolerance, and gave me breadth of mind.

3. College trained my mind. It developed the habit of opening my mind to new ideas, studying, thinking, discriminating, and exercising judgment.

4. College developed my sense of citizenship. It created within me a broader sense of responsibility to society, increased my awareness of group problems, gave me perspective, and deepened my sense of obligation.

5. College gave me self-confidence. It provided opportunities for me to develop the qualities of self-assurance and leadership through experience in group participation.

You see, college does something to you as a person.

A Practical Concern

HOWEVER social, idealistic and romantic may be the reasons for going on to college, the young man or woman is always faced with a practical outcome in a very few years. He or she must earn a living. And for all of the professions and most of the callings today, a person must have a college education.

Because college selects the best and prepares its graduates well for life, college graduates earn more money than noncollege graduates. Dean Lord's study found that each year of college was worth $18,000 in the total earnings of a college graduate during his working lifetime.

In the college environment, many young men and women of common age and common interests find their life partners. As a college woman, a girl is more likely to marry a man who will himself succeed in life.

A psychologist said to me the other day that he felt college was worthwhile even if there were no academic studies at all. What he meant was that the environment creates an atmosphere of persons striving to be at their best and encourages them to habits of physical exercise, concern for personal appearance, appreciation of the arts and an alterness to issues being discussed in the world.

Working Your Way

COLLEGE education is expensive, but it is worth the price. From experience, I am convinced that every young American who wants to go through college can find a way to do so.

A fulltime undergraduate student can work about 15 hours a week and earn about $400 during the regular college year.

An average budget for a student going away from home to college looks something like this:

Tuition, books, and fees	$600
Board and room	550
Clothes, laundry, and incidentals	400
	$1550

If a student goes to college in Washington and lives at home, his budget looks something like this:

Tuition, books, and fees	$600
Weekly pass	65
Noon lunches and meals away from home	175
Clothes, laundry, and miscellaneous expenses	160
	$1000

Most colleges have financial advisers to assist students in finding partime work and in working out personal budgets.

Education Lifelong, Corning Emphasizes

By Dr. Hobart M. Corning
Superintendent, District Public Schools

AT THIS season of the year, 3022 students will be graduating from the public senior high schools and vocational high schools of the District.

"What next?" say the students and the parents. "Will it be college? Will it be a less formal continuation of their education or will it be a job?"

DR. CORNING

A large percentage of these graduates will choose college to prepare themselves for specialized job opportunities. Many, however, will seek employment immediately. The important consideration for all these young people is that life is so constituted that we are never completely prepared.

Changing economic conditions and scientific developments bring corresponding changes in living conditions and in job requirements. The wise student, whether he goes to college now or not, will take advantage of the opportunities that are available to extend his preparation, either through formal or less formal educational activities. This process should go on throughout his productive years.

Those graduates who, because of economic pressures, are prevented from continuing their education at this time, should so plan their earning and spending that they may ultimately proceed with advanced training.

There are many such opportunities in this community now, both on the college and non-academic levels.

Your Record at a Glance

'Past Performances' Sheet Aids Job-Hunter

By Dorothy Mead Jacobsen
Head, Employment Branch, Departmental Civilian Personnel Division, Department of the Navy

THAT HIGH SCHOOL diploma will help you get a job. Employers want people with trained and disciplined minds. Remember, however, that in the District of Columbia alone, 2500 other young men and women are getting their diplomas this June. Competition will be keen. It is up to you to convince the employer that you are the one for his job.

Decide first what kind of work you want. Have you any special training or talent? Do you want a job that will give you training for a career, or a temporary one to help pay future college expenses? If you're thinking of private business, register with the local Social Security office and get your Social Security card.

Prepare a brief summary sheet which you can present at each interview; an opening may come up after you leave, and the interviewer will know how to get in touch with you. Type neatly on a single page of white paper your name, address and telephone number, such personal data as age, height, weight and marital status, the name of your high school and date of graduation and any school honors or activities.

Be sure to mention such special skills as typing, shorthand, foreign language, mechanical drawing, radio operation. Record all your work experience, giving the dates of employment and the names and address of your employers. Include temporary or part-time jobs. Give two or three references who really know something about you.

Now to find the job. There are numerous ways: watch the help-wanted columns in the newspapers; register with employment agencies; public or private; write letters of application; apply in person at the offices in which you are interested. Employers usually want to see the persons they are considering for jobs. Tell your friends you are job-hunting; they often know of openings.

After you have decided where you are going to apply, find out all you can about what the firm does and what kinds of worker it hires. This will help you to be more intelligent in the interview.

Here are a few tips for your first interview:

1. Conservative dress makes the best impression. Girls—go easy on the makeup; boys—don't forget the coat and tie.
2. Leave your gum and cigarettes at home.
3. Take a notebook and pencil to record the names and addresses of the persons you see. Right after the interview jot down their comments such as, "Call me in two weeks" or "Sorry, no jobs."
4. Go to your interview alone. Let your friends or your mother wait for you outside.
5. Get to your appointment on time but don't be disgruntled if you have to wait.
6. Don't bluff, but appear interested. Don't hestitate to ask pertinent questions about the job. It is an indication that you are interested.
7. Don't be too skeptical of temporary jobs. Often they develop into something permanent.
8. If the interviewer says he will get in touch with you and doesn't, wait a reasonable length of time and then either call him or go in to see him again.
9. Don't wear out your welcome. When the interviewer indicates that he is through talking, thank him and leave.

Don't be discouraged if you can't find a job right away. It may take days or weeks. At the end of each day, think over the interviews you have had. See if you can improve the way you present your qualifications. Perhaps you have set your sights too high for a beginner.

Eventually you will find the spot you are looking for. Then do a bang-up job, for the next time you look for work your best selling point will be an enthusiastic recommendation from your boss.

Streamlined Learning

War Proved Worth Of 'Tech' Schools

By J. S. Noffsinger

Director, National Council of Technical Schools

Noffsinger

TOO few of the vocational counsellors in our public schools have yet discovered one of the most important of our post-high school educational institutions—the technical institute. As a result, thousands of American high school graduates, who should secure this type of training, have never even heard about it through their vocational guides and counselors.

The great value of the technical institute as a distinct type of educational institution was clearly demonsrated during World War II, when it was obsolutely essential to the public welfare that hundreds of thousands of civilians be transformed almost instantly into skilled technicians to man our production lines and to keep a mechanized military force in successful operation. It was demonstrated that educational processes as well as mechanical production could be streamlined without material loss.

Because of sheer necessity it was learned that successful technical training could be imparted in from one half to one third the time usually required by traditional academic institutions.

As the name indicates, a technical institute is a school offering technical courses which include manipulative skills and techniques, such as offered by a trade school, and also the theory or professional aspects of the same technical field similar to the content of courses found in schools of professional engineering.

It is recognized that trade schools primarily seek to produce journeyman mechanics while the professional engineering school seeks to produce individuals capable of working primarily with technical ideas and theory. The technical institute, on the other hand, seeks to qualify its students with both the physical skills and the theoretical "know how."

Highly Intensive Course

THE instruction now offered in most technical institutes is streamlined into one and two-year highly specialized intensive college-level courses, which usually contain as much, and in some instances more, mathematics, physics, and engineering subjects than are given in most four-year engineering colleges. The modern shops and laboratories within these institutions are given far greater weight and importance than in the typical college or university program.

Thus, in a short period, with specialized, intensive college-level course of instruction on fundamental, theory, and skill subjects, a graduate of a technical institute can adequately be prepared and ready to enter industry.

Our industrial corporations today require from 4 to 10 times as many technical institute graduates of the above type as they do professional engineers. Official recognition of the technical institute field has recently been given by the Engineers Council for Professional Development.

The one agency, however, that has probably done more than any other to bring the importance of the technical institute to the attention of educational advisers, and to the young men and women planning to pursue post-high educational programs within the technical field is the National Council of Technical Schools (2601 16th st. nw., Washington 9, D. C.) This agency has been engaged in setting up standards, inspecting and approving technical institutes for the past eight years, and publishing a directory of approved and fully accredited technical institutes.

Short Courses Cited

The Bliss Electrical School indicates that it offers one course only in industrial electrical engineering, which is 32 weeks in length. Its graduates are readily absorbed by outstanding, nationally known corporations.

The Capitol Radio Engineering Institute specializes in the field of radio broadcasting, television, electronics, etc. One local television station in the City of Washington now has 13 CREI graduates on its staff.

While its courses of instruction may be completed in from 9 to 22 months, yet its reputation in the engineering field places it within the top group of professional radio and television engineering schools. This institute also has group training contracts with some of the largest employers in the United States and Canada.

During the past year a group of educational leaders from Japan were impressed with the outstanding quality of the educational accomplishment in the field of broadcasting and electronics by CREI and sought and secured the right to translate CREI instructional materials, methods of operation, etc., into the Japanese language, and is now in the process of setting up a duplicate CREI in Tokyo.

BETHESDA-CHEVY CHASE High School will graduate 285 seniors, June 20, at the Bethesda Theater. Dr. Paul F. Douglass, president of American University, will be speaker.

The Class of 1950, largest in the school's 22-year history, will open a busy June Week with Class Day, June 14.

The following evening, at the Chavy Chase Woman's Club, the informal senior banquet be held.

The senior prom, Friday evening, will be held at the Kennedy-Warren Hotel.

The Rev. Robert E. Sherrill will address the baccalaureate service at the Bethesda Presbyterian Church, June 18.

Nearly 70 percent of B-CC's graduates go on to college. Many of this year's seniors have been awarded scholarships or have been accepted for college next year.

Those receiving four-year scholarships are William Willcox to Yale, George Brewster to Northwestern, James Connor and Henry Turner to Washington and Lee and Brigitte Buchmann and Fred Warder to George Washington.

John Hopfield received a four-year renewable scholarship to Swarthmore, Nancy Wilson, Jane Prior, Audrey Mittacos, Earle Bates and Warren Low were awarded one-year scholarships.

Some seniors will go directly into jobs. A special diversified occupations course has given 25 students job experience while they earned their credits for graduation.

The 1949-50 school year saw several honors come to Bethesda-Chevy Chase. The school newspaper and yearbook were rated All-American by the National Scholastic Press Association for the second consecutive year. B-CC's journalists captured top honors in the Montgomery County inter-high press convention, also for the second consecutive year.

Better Get Counseling

Jobs Plums Are Fewer For the 1950 Graduate

By Seymour L. Wolfbein

Labor Department Bureau of Labor Statistics

GRADUATES in the Greater Washington area will join students throughout the country this year in making at least one record: They will be members of the largest graduating class in this Nation's history.

About 1¼ million high school diplomas will be awarded this year, matching last year's total. In addition, about half a million people will be receiving college degrees, considerably more than last year's record of 423,000. In just a two-year period, therefore, we will have 2½ million high school graduations, plus almost a million college degrees granted.

All this adds up to an unprecedented flow of well trained and educated young people, many of whom will be ready to make their first full-time entry into America's job market. But the very fact that our graduating classes are so large means that competition for a job will be intensified. This comes in the face of the fact that the war and postwar shortages in many occupations have now been filled by previous graduates.

This does not gainsay the fact that the outlook is still excellent in many fields of work. In addition, the Nation's economy is now operating in high gear and the chances are that employment will continue high throughout the year. The fact remains, however, that the average graduate is going to have to look longer and harder for the job he wants and for which he has been trained.

Law Field Crowded

IN VIEW of the general job outlook, it is especially important that the graduate get as much information as possible on where the best opportunities are—in what occupations, in what areas. Opportunities will be influenced greatly by differences in the rate of unemployment in different labor market areas, while the employment outlook differs a great deal from one occupation to another.

Thus, job prospects range from excellent for those able to get into and complete medical or dental school to poor for law, which is already overcrowded. Even within a given field different specialties have different job prospects. In teaching, for example, there is a great shortage of elementary school teachers side by side with a growing oversupply of high school teachers. The same goes for different specialties in engineering or the building trades or printing occupations.

The graduate in the Greater Washington area is fortunate in the amount and kinds of information, guidance and counseling available to him.

Most schools have excellent guidance and counseling services. Many local business and industrial firms are points of valuable information. In the Labor Department itself the Bureau of Labor Statistics publishes information on job prospects in most of the major occupations and industries in the United States through its Occupational Outlook Service. The Women's Bureau publishes similar information on occupations where jobs are filled by women. And the local offices affiliated with the United States Employment Service provide professional counseling, testing and placement services to facilitate the finding of a satisfactory job.

In many respects, the wisest course is to continue in school, if one can, in order to improve the chances for employment.

In engineering, for example, many people with little if any college education used to fill professional jobs on the basis of practical experience. Now it is much harder to do this. Most jobs go to men with bachelor's degrees.

The same trend can be seen in most other professions. In addition, the proportion of sales, clerical and administrative jobs for which a college education is required or preferred has been growing rapidly.

'Limited Opportunities'

THUS, the reader of the Bureau of Labor Statistics' Occupational Outlook Handbook constantly comes across the warning that even in occupations where the outlook is good, it is good only for the well-trained individual. Here are a few examples: Draftsman: "Good prospects for well trained—limited opportunities for beginners"; chemist: "Good for chemists with graduate training, those with only bachelors' degree may have difficulty obtaining professional jobs"; lab technician: "Good employment opportunity for graduates from approved schools and for all-around experienced workers with college background. High school graduates with experience as helpers or routine workers will not have much chance in competition with well-trained personnel."

Brokerage Demands 'A' Scholar

By Francis C. Hunter

Manager, Washington Office, Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Beane

Hunter

JOB opportunities in the investment and brokerage business this spring should be pretty good. The industry, of course, does not employ great numbers of high school and college graduates as it is comparatively small. Throughout this year, however, there has been a steady increase in the volume of business done, and the success a few large firms have had with training programs should result in a fair demand for job applicants.

The outstanding characteristic of the job market this year, however, will be a demand for quality. As other industries reduce their demand for new employes, standards immediately rise. The job interviewer today is considerably more selective than he has been at any time since the war. His standards are higher and starting rates of pay are perhaps a little below those in the early days of the postwar boom.

Clerical positions in the investment business require specialties developed through experience on the job. Supervisory jobs show good promise for the ambitious high school graduate, although advancement to top administrative or supervisory jobs is controlled by low turnover and comparatively few new openings. The business is learned best through rotated job assignments.

For the limited openings which are available, only the high school graduate having the best scholastic record, together with a well-defined notion of what he wants to do, can possibly land a spot. Training in the job and a well-planned promotion schedule are now an accepted part of employe development in the field.

For college graduates, the continuing shortage of executive and sales replacements makes the outlook more hopeful. Dynamic sales programs, consistent with expanded market interest, present a variety of opportunities for the outstanding college man who wants to make a career of so highly specialized a product as securities. Broadened promotional programs and more liberal outlays for advertising have opened new fields for the salesman. In addition, the wider distribution of investment trust shares has introduced a new and popular sales product.

The applicant for a sales assignment will find a prospective employer not too impressed with a college degree as such. The large number of bachelors' degrees in the market as a result of the Government subsidy naturally has dimmed their value as a selling point. Postgraduate degrees, however, still considerably enhance an applicant's chances.

Particularly for sales assignments, training plans are still an accepted part of job orientation.

In security sales, character, personality and adaptability are probably more important than technical training. In securities research, however, technical competence in economic and security analysis is a basic requirement.

For high school graduates, a great variety of skilled and semi-skilled office jobs is available. Opportunities run all of the way from board markers to bookkeepers and from file clerks to secretaries.

Lincoln High Graduating 74

By Mary Belle Hawkins

Miss Hawkins

THE senior class of Lincoln High School numbers 74 students—39 girls and 35 boys.

Enrolled in the class are several outstanding athletes, scholars and artists. Among their achievements are several athletic trophies, oratorical awards and scholastic honors. Eleven students have been elected to the National Honor Society: Beatrice Hebron, William Powell, Martha Tibbs, Joan Taylor, Ruth Genies, Mary Belle Hawkins, Edythe Pratt, Naomi Garner, Gloria Jackson, Francis Jackson, and Geraldine Barbour. Miss Taylor has been awarded a four-year scholarship to study at Oberlin College, Ohio.

Public speaking awards were won by Miss Geraldine Barbour and George Snowden in the annual oratorical contest sponsored by the Rockville chapter of the Elks Lodge.

In an essay contest sponsored by the Rockville chapter of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, first prize went to Miss Edythe Pratt for her theme, "Americanism."

In March Miss Mary Belle Hawkins was elected to the Tri-State Championship basketball team. She is the first Lincoln High School student to achieve this honor. Charles Lenoir, Russell Palmer, Carl Turner and Herbert Payne sparked the Lincoln High quintet to the Eastern Shore Basketball Championship in 1948-49.

Officers of the senior class are: Geraldine Barbour, president; Mary Smith, vice president; Irene Isreal, secretary; Ruth Genies, assistant secretary and Carl Turner, treasurer.

Personnel Turnover Very Low in Banks

By George M. Fisher

President, D. C. Bankers Association.

Fisher

SERIOUS consideration should be given by all graduates to selecting banking as a vocation. What are the working conditions in a bank; and what are the possibilities for future advancement?

Working conditions are generally excellent, and the environment is wholesome. All employes are selected with care, so that no fear need be felt as to the integrity and general reputation of fellow workers. The work itself is clean, interesting and educational. Employment is steady, as there are no large lay-offs and rehirings as in industrial businesses.

The banker is quick to recognize good work on the part of employes, and to reward such work through promotion, yet the personnel turnover in banks is very low, and it is generally necessary to wait for the conditions which will make promotions possible.

To succeed in banking an employe must be punctual, accurate and careful in every detail of his work. The beginner in a bank may make collections, copy records, sort checks, or perform any number of minor duties; but accuracy is as important in these duties as it is in every other position in a bank. As employes are advanced, they come in contact with the public, where a courteous manner is essential. Much of the education of bank employes is of a type which is gained on the job.

A graduate deciding on banking as a vocation and taking a beginner's position, may be making a choice of a lifetime career.

43 Graduates of Burdick Going Directly Into Jobs

By Carole Turano

AT LAST the magic time is here—graduation time! For the next two happy weeks, 44 excited graduates of Burdick Vocational High School will be caught breathlessly between—yesterday and tomorrow.

The future is always gratifyingly secure for a Burdick graduate. The diplomas our girls receive represent not only the best standards of academic achievement but also guarantee that the student is qualified to take a position immediately in one of the 11 semi-professional or trade courses offered at Burdick. Many of our graduates have already proven themselves capable workers in part-time positions for the past year. Upon graduation, 10 Burdettes will take positions at once as stenographers, seven as retailers, eight as beauticians, three as practical nurses, five as machine operators, three as commercial dressmakers, five as nursery assistants, and two as food specialists.

Our busy graduates also find time to participate in Burdick's varied extra-curricular activity program. Highlights of the past year were the Talent Show, the presentation of a group of original plays, written and directed by Encore, our dramatic club; the annual spring style show, and the organization of the new and very popular square dancing groups. The graduates are now straining against that June deadline date for the final issue of the Burdette, the school paper.

No graduation at Burdick would be complete without the traditional Class Day program. After the Class Day Luncheon for the graduates, the entire student body is invited to attend the Annual Class Day program in the auditorium. The Class Prophecy is dramatized, the Will read and the Honor Awards presented to the graduates by organizations. No less coveted are the school awards for outstanding shop, perfect attendance, dramatics, journalism, library, and school guide service.

'Halls of Montezuma':

Marine Corps Is Urged For Security, Training

By Brig. Gen. Clayton C. Jerome, USMC
Director of Marine Recruiting

PRESTIGE and security are two prime ambitions of most young men and women graduating from high school, and faced with the necessity of making their making their own way in the world. They also would like adventure, to see some of the world, and to receive specific training for advancement. These ambitions for action and attainment to make a capable, broad-minded and better American flow naturally through the Marine Corps in individual careers leading to success.

Gen. Jerome

All Marines are required to measure up to basic standards of conduct and military ability. Then each is helped to choose a field in which his greatest talent lies. On-the-job training, specialist schools and other educational programs are some of the numerous opportunities extended Marines to get ahead.

Every Marine must study to advance. Officers and enlisted men are given professional examinations for promotion to higher ranks. Marines may enroll for correspondence courses in the Marine Corps Schools, Quantico, Va. They also may enroll in the correspondence school system of the Marine Corps Institute, established 30 years ago, and offering more than 200 accredited high school, college and technical courses to thousands of Marines.

These schools, and other study, help Marines move up into higher paying ranks. So successful is the Marine Corps method of training enlisted men that some 80 percent of its officers have come up from the ranks.

Although Marine Corps enlisted men and officers are expected to qualify in basic military requirements, their duty with land, sea and air units gives them a wide opportunity for specialization. Electronics, jet propulsion, engineering, mechanics, communications, transportation, supply, personnel management—and of course, responsibility and leadership—are just a few of the fields open to Marines to prove their excellence.

Security Is Assured

AS A YOUNG Marine sets out on a career of planned advancement, he has this economic security: free housing, food, clothing and medical and dental care. There is additional security for a Marine advancing in age and rank.

Security and retirement pay with monthly checks is the reward of a career Marine. Many retired Marines have discovered their service careers are stepping stones to responsible positions in the business world.

Meantime, a Marine on active duty travels around the world, making new friends, receiving an education worth thousands of dollars.

Today, as always, the Marine is a fighting man. He is specially trained as an individual, with that ability to take care of himself and his shipmates which welds Marines together with lasting pride and loyalty.

The Marines are always training, and testing new devices and tactics. Their training is rugged and exacting. Marine Corps training builds men. It builds a fighting force.

240 to March at Episcopal

By Sam Hicks, Jr.

ON JUNE 10, at 11 a. m., the Episcopal High School near Alexandria, Va., will graduate one of its largest classes. This school of 240 boys from many States, will complete its 111th year with the two-day finals celebration and graduation. Headmaster Richard P. Williams, jr., expects to give diplomas to 55 graduates.

The class officers give a sample of the geographical distribution of the student body—President J. Frank Kelley, 3d., Atlanta, Ga.; Vice President Charles W. K. Gamble, Boston, Mass., and Secretary-Treasurer H. Gordon Leggett, jr., Lynchburg, Va.

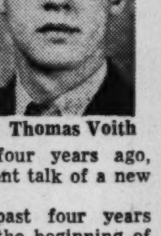
Attention to finals will begin with the baccalaureate sermon to be delivered on Sunday, June 4, 1950, in the chapel of the neighboring Virginia Theological Seminary by the Right Rev. A. B. Kinsolving, 2d, D.D., Bishop of Arizona, an alumnus of the school. An informal dance will be held June 8. The society celebration the next evening will be the major literary and athletic awards —then the big social event of the year.

Episcopal High School, founded in 1839, was closed briefly during the Civil War while its buildings were used as a Union Army hospital. Firmly reestablished, it was one of the first schools in the Nation to institute an honor code, still maintained.

Bell Students Close 2 Eras

By Thomas Voith

TWO distinctions have been placed on the 1950 class of Bell Vocational High School. One, the last class to remember the experience of attending classes in the old quarters at 7th and O sts. nw. Also, the last group to graduate under the four-year high school plan.



Thomas Voith

When the class first came to Bell four years ago, there was constant talk of a new building.

During the past four years there has been the beginning of many traditions for the future. The sports program in the inter-high competition has been established. Wilson and Roosevelt were defeated in baseball, improving the morale and school spirit.

The cadet corps has grown and there has been the establishment of better quarters for the students. In 1949, Darrell White, a member of the rifle team, won top honors among the first five high schools in District of Columbia. This year he won second place.

Darrell White built a Geiger-Mueller counter for the Science Fair this year. A picture and an article showing this device will appear in a well known science magazine in the near future.

Commencement exercises will be held June 13 at 2 p. m. in the school auditorium. Seventeen boys will receive high school diplomas, and nine will receive shop certificates. These students will enter printing, painting, electric, auto, machine, and metal trades in the District of Columbia.

The class has been invited by H. B. Long to visit the Skyline Caverns at Front Royal, Va. This trip is set for June 1, with a picnic on Skyline Drive after visiting the caverns.

The class officers are Thomas Voith, president, from Print Shop; William E. Fox, vice president, from Machine Shop; and Robert Woodville, secretary-treasurer, from Machine Shop.

Versatility By the Dozen

By Florence Hart
Hoffman-Boston High School

THE GRADUATION class of Hoffman-Boston High School is small in number, only 12. No class, however, could be more proud of the unique place we are to hold in the school's history.

Miss Hart

Our boys this year made their debut on the basketball court and the baseball field in competitive sports.

There is dramatic talent in our small class. "High Window," presented by the Dramatic Players under the direction of Miss A. T. Brittain, won top honors in the Dramatic Tournament of the northern district of Virginia. Beverly Cannon, a senior, had the lead. Other seniors in the cast were Rowena Jackson and Paul Moore.

Another first was our participation in the annual Music Festival at Virginia State College, Petersburg. Our choral group, under the direction of Miss Mary Davidson, received a rating of excellent. Our school band also made its debut this year.

Sylvia Redmond, a junior, won the Elks' local oratorical contest.

Our class day program will be in the form of a play. The commencement exercises will be held June 13. Zelma Chambers and Mattie Goodine tied for salutatorian, and Florence Hart was named valedictorian.

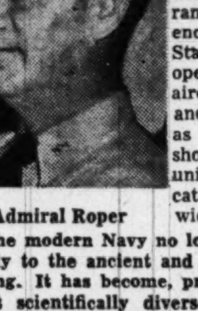
Great Range of Experience

Ever Consider a Career in the Navy?

By Vice Admiral John W. Roper, USN
Chief of Naval Personnel and Deputy Chief of Naval Operations

A CAREER in the services can be an especially rewarding way of life.

More and more, as the world develops industrially and scientifically, it is required of man that he become more specialized in the fields of his endeavor. Private industry offers many unique opportunities, but it is doubtful if any business offers a wider range of trade experience than the United States Navy, which operates a variety of aircraft, surface ships and undersea craft, as well as machine shops, maintenance units, radio communications units, a world-wide clerical force.



Admiral Roper

The modern Navy no longer devotes itself solely to the ancient and worthy art of seafaring. It has become, probably, one of the most scientifically diverse organizations in the world, utilizing the services of many skilled craftsmen among its personnel.

What does this mean exactly to today's high school graduates? Or to those young people unable to complete their secondary educations? It means that they find in the Navy an ideal training ground where they will acquire a modern trade skill that is closely related to a number of civilian occupations. There is, for example, the presently expanding field of electronics, which has a wide application to Naval operations and is used by the Navy in the submarine service, in the surface fleets and in naval aviation. To those who qualify for this type of duty, it is a splendid chance to learn a trade that extends beyond the basic field of radio, into the realms of television, radar, sonar and automatic industrial control systems.

There are 62 separate job fields in which Navy petty officers are trained, and for which the Navy recruit today may apply. They cover such divergent fields as electricity, mechanics, finance and disbursing, aerial photography and optics, to name only a few. Almost without exception they represent a type of assignment which requires special schooling, and the Navy, in its service schools and through on-the-job training qualifies new personnel in large numbers every year.

See the World

THERE is more to Navy life, however, than the trade training and security that the service offers. The travel aspects of serving in the Navy still appeal to the Nation's youth. The chance to see foreign ports and to cross the oceans have always attracted men to the calling of the sea, and always will.

The companionship among shipmates in the Navy is also well known. There is an inducement, too, in the competitive sports played in the Navy around the world.

Young women students, as well as men, are showing greater interest in the Navy as a career. Today's woman gets the same advantages and benefits from service in the Navy as the Navy man. The WAVES, who have become an integral and permanent part of the naval organization, function effectively in almost all of the ratings that men hold, and receive equal pay as well as retirement compensation.

U. S. Navy Photo
Seaman takes a bearing

In all its varied programs the Navy seeks to stimulate the initiative of personnel to develop their abilities to the fullest. One means of doing this is through the various programs open for officer candidacy.

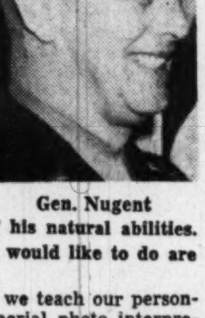
There are fleet quotas each year for the Naval Academy, as well as for the Naval Reserve Officers training program, which features a college education at one of 52 of the country's leading universities. All eligible enlisted men may apply.

Airman Can Continue His Education

By Maj. Gen. Richard E. Nugent
Acting Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel, U. S. Air Forces.

THE ADVANTAGES of a United States Air Force career are not limited to purely material benefits—such as food, clothing, shelter, good pay and medical attention, nor is the Air Force desirous of emphasizing these material advantages.

It is interested in emphasizing the opportunities for self-improvement and advancement through additional education available.



Gen. Nugent

The Air Force's Airman Career Program sets up 42 broad fields for major concentration of study and training. An airman is placed in one of these fields only after exhaustive scientific tests of his natural abilities. What the man has done and would like to do are thoroughly explored.

In the technical schooling, we teach our personnel to be radar repairmen, aerial photo interpreters, intelligence specialists, printers and other things. Airmen who do well in their studies acquire a professional status which commands respect and good pay, whether in the Air Force or in civilian life.

All airmen may also take advantage of "Operation Bootstrap," and work toward a diploma or degree from accredited colleges and universities. Assistance is provided to help meet tuition costs for those who are not eligible under veterans' programs.

The University of Maryland, Georgetown University, American University, George Washington University, Catholic University and Howard University (all in this area) are among more than 40 civilian colleges and universities cooperating by providing off-duty college level courses for our personnel—in this country, in England, Germany, Hawaii, Alaska, and throughout the Far East Command.

Correspondence Courses

MORE THAN 300 correspondence and self-study courses at the college-level are also available through the United States Armed Forces Institute, and many colleges accept some of these courses toward degree requirements.

Officer Candidate School is open to those who can pass an examination based on knowledge of subject at junior-college level.

Those eligible are: Men, with no previous service, between 17 and 34 years of age, of excellent character, good physical condition, and high intelligence; women between 18 and 35 who are high school graduates, unmarried, of excellent character and good health. WAFS have all the opportunities and advantages provided for airmen.

Men under 18 years of age, and women under 21, must have the consent of their parents or guardian before being accepted for enlistment.

A. U. Scholarships

Fourteen high school graduates of the Greater Washington Area have been awarded scholarships to American University.

Winners are: John H. Kendrick, Anacostia High School; Lorna M. Roman, Bethesda-Chevy Chase; Ethel McEvoy, Coolidge; Robert A. Mackie, Central; Richard Witter, Eastern; Betty Groah, Falls Church; Rose Marie Leuteroic, George Washington; Rita Botkin, McKinley; Mary L. Hanson, Montgomery-Blair; Samuel O. Albert, Roosevelt; Jo Ann Christopherson, Washington-Lee; Irma Lazaroff, Western; Lucile Buice, Wilson; Calvert Clingenpeel, Fairfax.

Other Articles on the Way

ADDITIONAL articles that will help the high school graduate chose a profession will appear in The Washington Post on next Friday and next Sunday.

Post Reporters James E. Hague and N. S. Haseltine will survey the fields of medicine and science. B. E. Hunsinger, managing director of Benjamin Franklin University, will write about accountancy; Ralph Goldsmith, vice president and general manager of Lansburgh and Bros., about merchandising; William McCausland, president of the D. C. Life Underwriters Association, on insurance; Frederick M. Feiker, dean of the school of engineering, the George Washington University, on engineering, and Mary Cusig Niles, assistat to chairman, Federal Personnel Council, on personnel.

Also of interest to the high school graduate will be Post Sportswriter Herb Heft's summary of the high school year in sport.

Many 'Ladders' in New Program

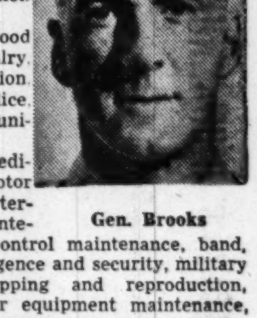
31 Army Career Fields For High School Grads

By Lieut. Gen. Edward H. Brooks
Army Assistant Chief of Staff G-1 (Personnel)

THE United States Army offers many and varied opportunities to the high school graduate under its new Enlisted Career Guidance Program. Young men and women entering the Army upon completion of high school are advanced in one of the 31 career fields. Each field has a number of "job ladders" which the soldier climbs from the lowest enlisted grade through the top warrant officer grade. There will be approximately 200 ladders in the 31 fields, with more than 320 different school courses.

The Army has already established 11 career fields and expects to complete the installation of the balance by August 31.

The fields thus far established are: Food service, infantry, artillery, armored cavalry, military engineering and construction, finance, machine accounting, military police, ammunition, wire maintenance and communications.



Gen. Brooks

Fields in process of preparation are: Medical, personnel and administration, motor transport, automotive maintenance, quartermaster maintenance, Army aircraft maintenance, electronics, armament and fire control maintenance, band, scientific services, communications, intelligence and security, military intelligence, railway, information, mapping and reproduction, chemical warfare, photography, engineer equipment maintenance, supply and marine operations.

The combat career fields, infantry, artillery and armored, and the electronics field probably offer the best opportunities at present because of the large number of vacancies. However, there are vacancies in every field for the properly qualified high school graduate.

Each career field is composed of related jobs. The soldier advances from one job on the ladder to the next. He may transfer or be transferred from one ladder to another in the same field, and also he may switch or be switched from one career field to another to meet his individual desires or Army requirements.

Promotion in the upper grades is obtained by Army-wide promotion tests in which the soldier competes against all vacancies for a particular job and grade throughout the entire Army.

The soldier may also obtain commissioned officer status. Qualified enlisted men are eligible to compete for Officer Candidate School, where a Reserve commission and orders to active duty as an officer may be earned by graduation. The top students of each OCS class may be offered Regular Army instead of Reserve commissions.

Men having certain professional and technical skills may also obtain direct Reserve commissions and duty as an officer. Also, highly qualified noncommissioned officers may obtain Reserve officer commissions by direct appointment. There also are opportunities open to highly qualified men for direct appointment as an officer, Regular Army.

A Reserve commission, may lead to a Regular appointment if the officer measures up during a year of carefully observed duty. Enlisted men are eligible to compete for appointments to the several military academies.

In addition to the opportunities offered by the service schools, the soldier may take courses in his off-duty time. The United States Armed Forces Institute offers more than 5500 courses, ranging from grade school to the professions. The costs are nominal. He may take courses anywhere he is stationed.

Record Class At Takoma

By Donna Rae Skinner

TAKOMA Academy is a small private Seventh-day Adventist school with an enrollment of 217 students.

The senior class of 1950 with its 51 members is the largest ever to be graduated from T. A.

Miss Skinner

April 24 was College Day at Washington Missionary College. At that time scholarships were presented to four students, Challis Jennings, Georgia deBruin, Lorraine Tarr and Earl Adams.

The Civitan Club of Silver Spring held an election in the high schools of this area to choose a boy and a girl who were the outstanding citizens of each school. Dick Hayes, senior class president,, was chosen from young men, and Donna Rae Skinner, secretary for the class, from the class from the girls. Challis Jennings and Elaine Rentfro, also of the senior class, received honors in an essay contest conducted by the Civitan Club.

Commencement exercises began Friday with a senior consecration service at which Elder R. A. Anderson-spoke. James White, class pastor, responded as the class arose in a dedication of their lives to the service of God and humanity. Saturday morning Elden D. E. Rebok, president of the Theological Seminary in Takoma Park, led the baccalaureate service in the Sligo Seventh-day Adventist church in Takoma Park. Graduation service will be held today in the Columbia Hall Auditorium.

What Apprenticeship Means:

Expert Outlines Today's Job Needs

By Gino J. Simi

Director of Apprenticeship, District of Columbia.

ONE OF THE primary purposes of the District of Columbia Apprenticeship Council is to obtain the cooperation of local employers and unions in establishing apprentice training under approved individual agreements "providing facilities for training and guidance in arts and crafts of industry and trade."

Simi

The council, therefore, is always on the lookout for employers properly equipped and sincerely interested in registering and training apprentices as all-round, full-fledged journeymen craftsmen. This function of the council directly concerns every high and prep school graduate who looks to a career in a manual and mechanical trade.

The council gives interested employers every technical assistance in formulating up-to-date, on-the-job apprenticeship programs which will pay rich returns in topnotch quality journeymen at the minimum cost.

Few Aspirants Can Qualify

HOWEVER, current graduates of local high and prep schools should remember that a bona fide apprenticeship is a privilege extended to only a limited number of aspirants each year. To qualify, the aspirant must demonstrate sincere interest and pronounced aptitude for the trade to the employer's satisfaction.

There are never enough true apprenticeship opportunities to go around. Today, particularly, with scores of GI graduates of private trade schools crowding the apprenticeship market, the demand for bona fide apprenticeships far exceeds the supply. Employers are in position to be "choosy" and to demand higher qualifying standards.

New inventions, production methods, more complex machinery and processes are intensifying the demand for all-around, precision-trained craftsmen.

In America, the apprenticeship upsurge evident in mechanical trades is also found in the manual trades, the ancient hand crafts.

The ravage of war has cut down or killed off the highly skilled hand craftsmen of Europe and the Orient. America must train its own makers of fine jewelry, furniture, shoes, and similar custom made luxury items.

While there are more apprenticeship opportunities now, there are still far fewer than those who seek them. Employers, aware that good apprenticeship training is costly and tedious, want to make sure that applicants have a real desire and the natural talent to master the basic skills, processes and techniques of a trade, manual or mechanical, before they engage themselves to train them.

They don't want to get themselves involved with trying to train the inept, the misfit, the untidy and careless. Employers also know that the young man who turns to apprenticeship as a "second choice" is likely to make a dismal failure.

Studies of local apprenticeship requirements, conducted by the Dictrict of Columbia Apprenticeship Council, indicate that local employers and unions should be training between 2000 and 2100 registered apprentices at all times in about 100 different trades.

The D. C. Apprenticeship Council's files show that on May 1 there were 1888 apprentices registered by city-wide joint labor-management apprenticeship committees and individual employers.

This means that there are between 200 and 300 potential apprenticeship situations with local employers not yet formally established.

The purpose of apprenticeship is to provide an orderly, planned procedure for replacement of journeymen craftsmen which will be lost to industries through retirement, death, permanent injury or sickness, or through other causes.

There are many unscrupulous employers who take advantage of the gullible "trade-hungry" youngsters by hiring them as so-called "apprentices" and then exploiting them as "cheap labor" at subminimum wages in unskilled and repetitive jobs.

High school graduates should be warned against these shrewd "cheap labor" sharks and "sweat shop" operators. Each year hundreds of young hopefuls lose out on promising careers through failure to recognize such "blind alley" occupational pitfalls.

Armstrong High to Picnic on June 2

By Barbara Ricks

DEAR MARY:

June is slowly gaining on us and June means graduation.

I want to tell you about our senior activities so you will know what is happening to this graduating class.

The president of our class is a football star, Frederick Sabbs, who has quite an interesting cabinet, including Vice President Drucille Friday, Recording Secretary Eugene Thurman, Corresponding Secretary Lorraine Ayers, Treasurer Robert Jackson and Sergeant-at-Arms Eugene Lawrence.

Most of the staff members on our school paper, the Torch, are seniors, namely: Lillian Harrison, society editor; Doris McConnell and Willie McNeil, sports editors, and Barbara Ricks, editor-in-chief.

Morris Hymes, who is major of the second battalion, is president of the student council this year. Robert Jackson is recording secretary, Carl Johnson is corresponding secretary and Barbara Ricks, vice president.

Our basketball team won the city championship and second place in the South Atlantic Conference, sparked by Eugene Lawrence.

This class of 97 students has copped quite a few honors, with three members in the National Honor Society: Morris Hymes, Robert Jackson and Louis Donald. Jackson has been awarded an engineering scholarship at Catholic University. American Legion awards for most worthy boy and girl went to Eugene Thurman and Barbara Ricks.

The senior picnic at Colton, Md., this year is coming off on June 1. On June 5 the annual pilgrimage to Gettysburg will be made.

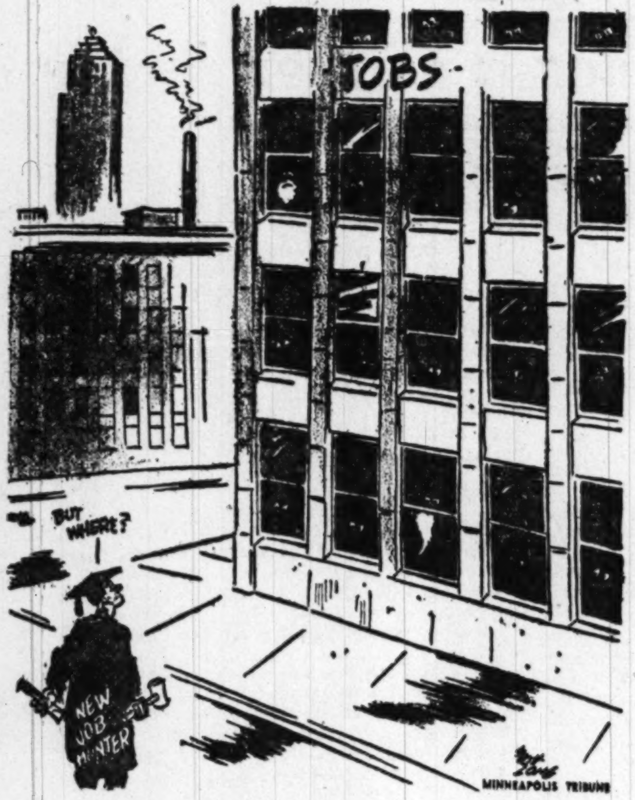
Class night is June 9: Mary Alice Davis wrote and will read the class history. Merrill Jones will open and read the class will. The seer for the evening will be Doris McConnell, who wrote the prophecy. Some of the musical talent of the class will come out in the class song written by Jean Garrett. Lillian Harrison will read an original class poem.

And now that wonderful culmination of all our activities, graduation, June 13, at 8 p. m. in the auditorium of the school. Valedictorian of the class is Morris A. Hymes and the salutatorian is Robert D. Jackson.

So long,

BARBARA.

READY TO CARVE A NICHE FOR HIMSELF...



All 40 of St. Albans' Seniors Preparing to Enter College

By Brice McAdoo Claggett

FORTY BOYS will pass from prep-school life to that of college when this year's class of St. Albans School is graduated on Saturday, June 3. As in the past, the Office of Commencement will be held before the great altar of Washington Cathedral, with Bishop Angus Dun conducting the service, and the subsequent "Prize Day" will take place at the Amphitheater.

Clagett

As usual, every member of the graduating class expects to enter college. As of May 10, 33 were already enrolled in next year's freshman classes of institutions of higher learning.

On the college board examinations, St. Albans students ranked near the top of the country, and several seniors have already received scholarships

The school prides itself on sponsoring an organized means of enjoyment of all the most popular fields of interest of its students. The biweekly News and the annual "Albanian" are participated in by a large group, the News having a staff of 48. This year the News has won highest honors in two Nationwide competitions.

For the artistically minded there are regular courses in painting and music appreciation. The Cathedral Choir, the Glee Club, and the "Octones" also attract many music lovers. The Government Club, a combination of debating society and civics course, acts as the United States Senate in discussing live political issues and obtaining for its "witnesses" members of Congress, men high in Government departments, and private authorities.

A Scout Troop, a Nature Club, a Prefect Board for student government, a sponsor system for the lower formers, a Student Vestry, an auto mechanics class, a Camera Club, and both formal and informal dances are other activities conducted by the school.

St. Albans profits in background and atmosphere by its position as part of the Cathedral.

The athletic program of the school offers eight seasonal sports. Although the emphasis is placed primarily on the maintenance of health and the development of sportsmanship and character, St. Albans teams rank high in the Interstate Academic Conference.

Wilson Rites Set June 14

By Klaudia Steidle

WOODROW WILSON'S fourteenth annual June commencement will take place June 14 at 5 p. m. in the school stadium.

Miss Steidle

In the graduating class of 316 members, Pamela Alexander and Rolland Hurst will serve as valedictorian and salutatorian, respectively. Hank Offterdinger will preside, and Norman J. Nelson, first assistant superintendent of schools, will be the featured speaker.

Washington Cathedral will be the scene of the baccalaureate service scheduled for June 11 at 2:30 p. m., when the Woodrow Wilson Choir will sing.

Saturday evening, June 10, is the Senior Prom in the main ballroom of the Shoreham Hotel, with the music of Tiny Meeker's Orchestra. Anne Lucas and Everett Eynon are cochairmen of the prem committee.

At the awards assembly on May 25, Richard Jewett was presented the Civitan Award, while Preston Kavanagh was given the University of Michigan award. Nell Weaver received the Soroptimist Club Key, Joan Schaaff was given the DAR pilgrimage award, and the Lions Club battalion commander's award was presented to Edward Feldman.

An eventful year started with "The Red Mill," in which Phillis Posnick, Patsy Herman, Rolland Hurst and David Parker sang the leads. On November 25, the Tigers defeated Tech to take their first interhigh football championship.

Foreign Service Review On Schedule at G. W.

Dr. Arthur E. Burns, dean of the school of government and professor of economics at George Washington University, will direct the university's fifth annual foreign service review course.

The course will be held June 19 to August 25 and is open to those already designated by the Department of State to take the foreign service examination in September. Applications must reach the school of government no later than June 1.

Bladensburg Makes Point

By Anne Newman and Jeanne Peake

BLADENSBURG High School's class of 1950, with 180 members, is the largest ever to graduate from this school. It was also the first at B. H. S. to attend the eighth grade when it was first started in Prince Georges County.

When the seniors returned to school last fall to the one-story building which most of them had attended for five years, they found a new annex. These two Army surplus buildings, with their skylights, low windows and new desks, gave a new look to the place.

Last fall interscholastic football was played for the first time in many years. With the odds against it, Bladensburg won its first game and went on to win the championship. Flag-twirlers were also introduced by the senior girls, and soon were copied by several other schools.

To celebrate the introduction of football, the band leader wrote a school song, "The Naughty Nine," which was introduced by the new band at the second game.

Soccer lost some of its popularity to the more glamorous football, but the team did well despite the fact that most of the better players had transferred to the gridiron. It won three games, lost two and tied one.

Basketball began shortly after Christmas, and the closing event of the season was All Bladensburg Night. This is an annual affair at which the king and queen of B. H. S. seniors are crowned. The king, Bobby Sharon, and queen, Gloria Love, were chosen by the entire school.

Wintertime provided the theme for the Senior Prom, which was held in the gym February 25. Cornelia Otis Skinner and Emily Kimbrough's "Our Hearts Were Young and Gay" was presented by the seniors March 31, with Helen Helpenstell as Emily and Betty Cissel as Cornelia.

After that, life for the seniors was a little quieter until the second induction of the National Honor Society. Eight seniors had been tapped earlier in the year and two more were chosen in May. Ten juniors were elected in the spring induction.

Miss Dysinger Wins Midland Scholarship

Miss Helen Frances Dysinger, former executive director of the Lutheran Inner Mission Society here, has received the first honorary degree ever offered a woman by 63-year-old Midland College at Freemont, Nebr.

The degree of doctor of laws was conferred on her for outstanding leadership in church, missionary, social welfare and religious education fields. She now is secretary for promotion for the Women's Missionary Society of the United Lutheran Church in America.

101st Class At Gonzaga

By Larry Moulmby

MEMBERS of Gonzaga's class of '50 should be very proud of their achievements in their four-year stay at the I st. institution, which ends in graduation June 11.

Moulmby

Perhaps Gonzaga's most publicized activity is its football team. In the past four years the Eagles have taken three Catholic championships and two city titles. The crowning point of the Eagles' athletic success came last winter when an underdog Purple eleven whipped Wilson, the interhigh champs, 12-7.

The 101st graduating class of Gonzaga will hold commencement exercises in the school auditorium on the evening of June 11.

For two consecutive years, now, the award for the outstanding high school athlete in the Washington area has been bestowed on Gonzagans. Johnny Hogan took the prize in '49 and this year the award fell to Billy Haley Gonzaga's journalistic endeavors, too, have come in for their share of laurels. In the school year '49-'50 both the yearbook, the Aetonian, and the school newspaper, the Aquilian, received All-American ratings from the National Scholastic Press Association.

In personal scholastic achievements, Gonzaga boasts Michael McDermott, who placed among the top three out of more than 400 students who took the competitive scholarship examination for Georgetown University, and William Drissel, who received an honorable mention certificate from Westinghouse in the annual science talent search.

Hyattsvilles Visit Concord

By Marion Sadler

NO BUZZING bee has been any busier this year than the senior class of Hyattsville High School.

Such traditions as the bazaar and its highlight, beauty contest; the annual fall and spring plays presented by the Dramatics Club, and the ever-growing Science Fair have been well snpported

This year the State Department of Education of Maryland and the State Department of Education of Massachusetts inaugurated the Student Exchange Program. Thirty seniors represented H. H. S. and the county to become the nucleus of the Travelers—a club sponsored by this program. We entertained our Concord guests the last week in March and our students visited Concord the last week of April.

The basketball team added another trophy to our showcase when it won the county championship game. The seniors, Lytle, Guest, Golden, Leaman, Winter and Walton, were the standbys of the team.

Many of the 238 graduates have received awards: the Kiwanis' citizenship awards, Marion Sadler, Jimmy Walker; the Naval Ordinance Laboratory essay award and the Selling As a Career Essay award were both won by Warren Usher; honorable mention in the Westinghouse Talent Search, Tim Goldsmith; a scholarship to Drexel Institute, Elsa Wirth and science awards were won by Marshall Peters, Tim Goldsmith, Eddie Updegraff, and Frances White.

The class of 1950 will be the last one to be graduated from Hyattsville High School.

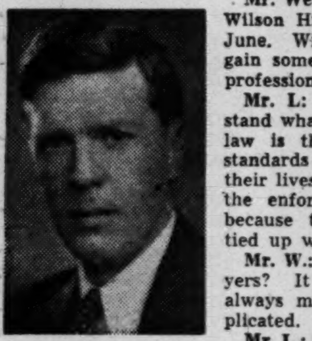
Word to a Youth

'Law Is the Enforcement Of Justice Among Men'

By John L. Laskey
President, District Bar Association

MISS RIPPLEY: Mr. Laskey, there is a young man named John Webster to see you.

Mr. Laskey: Show him in, please . . . How do you do, John. What can I do for you?



LASKEY

Mr. Webster: I am a senior at Woodrow Wilson High School and will graduate in June. Will you be willing to help me to gain some understanding of the law as a profession?

Mr. L: First, it might help to understand what law is. In its broad sense, the law is the aggregate of principles and standards by which men live and conduct their lives. I like to think of law, also, as the enforcement of justice among men, because the idea of law is inseparably tied up with the idea of justice.

Mr. W.: Can't we have law without lawyers? It seems to me that lawyers are always making things unnecessarily complicated.

Mr. L.: I don't believe that we could have a successful legal system of anything other than the most primitive kind without lawyers. The lawyer is probably the oldest professional class, and he was created because he was necessary. Even the priest is no more ancient in origin.

Mr. W. What does the study of law offer in the way of a career? I'd like to do something useful with my life, and I shouldn't want to get started in a sterile profession merely because it seemed the easiest way to earn a living.

Mr. L.: For a career which is replete with a richness of experience and an opportunity for service to one's fellow-man, there is no wiser choice than the study of law. Discounting the financial rewards, which are not always inconsiderable, the rewards in the form of emotional and intellectual satisfaction, in a life that is never dull and often exciting, and in a span of years of activity which leaves the lawyer functioning, if he so desires, long after most other professionals have gone into retirement, the law is unsurpassed.

Did I say "career"? I should have said "careers". The man who is legally trained has an unlimited choice of careers. The law provides a very large proportion of national and state leadership at all levels of authority. Among the founders of our Republic, lawyers were heavily disproportionate in number. A majority of our presidents have been lawyers, as are a majority of our governors, senators, and representatives. Among cabinet officers and other public officials you will find many lawyers, although their jobs are not legal in nature.

Lawyers, moreover, will be found occupying such diverse positions as presidents of universities and presidents of corporations, commissioner of baseball and secretary of State. Lawyers—have made eminent novelists—like Charles Dickens and Sir Walter Scott.

The lawyer is the leader and organizer of community activities. He heads the school board, and organizes the Red Cross drive. He provides the necessary organizational and leadership spark whether it be for mopping up after a flood or delivering the Fourth of July oration. The scope of his activities extends far beyond the limits of his office or courtroom. He is the catalyst of mankind.

B.-C. C. Summer School

Bethesda-Chevy Chase High School will conduct an eight week summer session from June 26 to July 21. Classes will meet twice daily, Monday through Friday, 9 a. m. to 11:30 a. m. and 12:30 p. m. to 3 p. m.

Holy Trinity Graduates 39

By Patricia Mulligan

ON June 6, 39 girls will be graduated from Holy Trinity High School in the school's twenty-fifth commencement exercises, at which Rev. Arthur A. O'Leary will preside. Of the class, which is the largest in Holy Trinity's history, 30 percent plan to attend college.

Miss Mulligan

One of the best-remembered highlights of the year will be the senior prom in the Wardman Park Continental Room on May 29, featuring Bradley Clay's orchestra. Trinimems, the yearbook edited by Mary Louise Benjamin, made its debut May 25. Class Night, when the "Last Will and Testiment" is read, and farewell songs are sung to each class, is scheduled for June 2.

The May Procession, in which the seniors wear white caps and gowns, and the underclassmen, blue, was May 21. Ann Wendel was elected May Queen by the students.

The senior play, "Anne of Green Gables," was enacted on April 21.

On April 23 the class attended Mass in St. Matthew's Cathedral, together with all the other graduates of Catholic high schools in Washington. Mass was followed by a breakfast at the Wardman Park, sponsored by the International Federation of Catholic Alumnae.

Earlier in the year, Susan Cramer, president of the Holy Trinity Athletic Association, was awarded the Ann Coombs trophy for athletic ability and outstanding sportsmanship. Ann Clark also received a cup in recognition of her team spirit in basketball and softball. Mary Alice Cavanaugh was presented with a check by the Sons of the American Revolution for third prize in an essay contest. Patricia Mulligan won a four-year board and tuition scholarship to Mount St. Agnes College, Baltimore.

Merinda Gascoigne, senior at the National Cathedral School for Girls, received a medal from the Very Rev. John W. Suter, dean of Washington Cathedral, for the best essay written by a student at Cathedral Schools on the topic of conservation. The award was presented at tree-planting ceremonies in the Cathedral close. Witnessing the presentation are James P. Berkley, cathedral verger and the Very Rev. Charles Martin, headmaster of St. Alban's School for Boys

Fiftieth Class At Cathedral

By Merida Gascoigne

NINETEEN-FIFTY is an important year for the National Cathedral School, and we, the seniors, are proud to be the fiftieth graduating class. Not only are the commencement ceremonies to be even more impressive than usual, for large numbers of alumnae are returning for the reunion, but the whole year has been crowded with interest.

This year has been marked by various highlights—the annual carol service with Saint Albans in the Cathedral, based on the centuries-old service of King's College, Cambridge; the fun-packed weekend at Skytop in Pennsylvania for winter sports; the tea at which we met Miss Katharine Lee, next year's principal; the dinner at the Shoreham Hotel which opened the anniversary celebrations; the trip to the United Nations; the May Day Festival; the lively Athletic Association banquet, and the many interesting speakers at our regular morning assemblies including the well-loved weekly talks by Dean John W. Suter,

The most exciting events for the class of 1950, however, are still to come. Saturday afternoon at Class Day, the seniors do a skit incorporating last wills and prophecies; the beautifully turned out yearbook, the Mitre, is issued, and farewell presents are given to the school and to Miss Mabel B. Truner, returning principal. On Sunday morning, June 4, a communion service for seniors and their parents is held in the cathedral.

For commencement itself, the cathedral, so much a part of us and all our activities throughout the year, provides the majestic background. The graduates in white caps and gowns, the entire school all in white, the alumnae and the faculty, file in a beautifully symmetrical line into the Great Choir.

72 Seniors Saying 'Goodby' at Holy Cross

By Cynthia Courtney

AT 9 THIS morning, 72 seniors in white caps and gowns will enter Our Lady of Sorrows chapel for graduation ceremony. Very Rev. James M. Campbell, Ph. D., chaplain, will offer mass, during which the graduates will receive Holy Communion. The Holy Cross Glee Club will sing. After mass, Father Campbell will confer diplomas, and the Very Rev. Edward G. Fitzgerald, O. P, will give the commencement address

Miss Courtney

The year saw seniors take up gavels in the following organizations: Student body president, Catherine Ellis; sodality prefect, Mary B. Carolan; president of CSMC, Mary E. Von Herbuliss; editor of the Gleaner, Maureen McNerney. Presidents of clubs included Agnes Desmond, Glee Club; Patricia Casey, Holy Cross Players; Jane Cahill, debating; Joan Ralph, French; Helen Carmody, Latin, Ileana Copello, Spanish, and Patricia Murphy, Red Cross.

The Moreau Chapter of the National Honor Society receives annual eligible upperclassmen. Members this year include seniors Jane Cahill, Joan Le Mense, Dolores Clay, Mary Lou Werres, Claire Kirchner, Virginia Roberts, and juniors Marjorie Williams, Elizabeth Belson, Sheila Rea, and Elizabeth De Mello.

Quill and Scroll, honorary society for high school journalists, added the following members: Maureen McNerney, Marjory Whitehurst, Camilla Fitzgerald, Alberta Houch and Mary Quisenberry.

During basketball season Margaret Immer and Catherine Ellis represented the school in the city all-star game.

Rose of the Cross Day was held April 30. Last year's student council president, Helen Roddy, presented the spade to Catherine Ellis, president for the year '49-'50.

Last Friday at 8 p.m., Clare Shannon and Frances Nelson, section presidents, introduced each senior individually as she took her place on the stage for class night. The program included an address by the Right Rev. Msgr. Edward B. Jordon, S. T. D., of Catholic University. Four-year honor students Maureen McNerney and Mary Byrne gave the salutatory and valedictory, respectively. Other honor graduates are Helen Carmody, Ursula Cossavella, Camilla Fitzgerald, Clair Kirchner and Maureen McNerney.

Bullis Gives 99 Diplomas

GRADUATION exercises of The Bullis School were held May 19, at St. Luke's Lutheran Church, Colesville rd., Silver Spring, Md. The address was given by Ernest Alton Meredith of Arlington, Va., salutatory address by Neil Cramer Danque of Takoma Park, Md., and the class history read by William Weetman Bonneville of Chevy Chase, Md.

The commencement address was made by Dr. Roy Tasco Davis, director, Inter-American Schools Service of the American Council of Education.

John E. Larson, esq., of the board of trustees of the school, presented the following prizes: for general excellence in studies for the ninth grade, John Richard Bains of Silver Spring; tenth grade, Jack Delano Clay of Arlington; eleventh grade, Arthur John Klaunberg, jr., of Baltimore, Md., and the twelfth grade, Neil Cramer Danque of Takoma Park. The Random Yeager Trophy, awarded for excellence in athletics, academics and leadership combined, was awarded to Joseph Mook of El Dorado, Ark. The citizenship award was given to Willard Lee Edwards of Silver Spring. Award for excellence in English went to Douglas Alan Bonneville of Greenfield, Mass. Excellence in mathematics prize was awarded to Ricky William Diehl of Newark, Del. The Bausch & Lomb award for general excellence in science was awarded William Weetman Bonneville.

William Francis Bullis, principal of the school, awarded diplomas to the 99 graduates.

Select a Job to Match Your Traits and Ability

By Thelma Hunt

Professor of Psychology, George Washington University

VOCATIONAL planning will occupy an important place in the minds of the several thousand Washington boys and girls who will graduate from high school within the next two weeks. Some of you will soon start to work. The best choice of a job depends upon a careful matching of your traits and abilities with the demand of the vocations of the world.

Dr. Hunt

Aptitudes, achievements, interests, and personality all enter in an important way into the individual analysis necessary for vocational planning. Your predominant aptitude may be "scholastic." You may have done very well in high school and give great promise of high achievement in college and university work. You might well want to follow those now in the "ivory towers" of our colleges and universities.

Another's aptitude may be predominately technical or scientific. You may be the one who should train yourself to keep the gadgets and complexities of our machine age in order or to discover further secrets of the scientific world. Still another's aptitude may lie in the esthetic-creative direction. Your ladder may be that of writing, music, or art.

Achievements Count

PREVIOUS achievements also count. If you have taken more than the average number of mathematic courses and have done well in them, you have one of the requirements for further training in many of the trades and in technical engineering fields of work. If you have chosen a business course in high school, you may already have the basic skills to begin a career. Previous special achievements in languages may give a basis for further training for translation work or the teaching of languages.

Interests must be matched with the activities of the job. A good matching will contribute toward your performance in a job and will go a long way toward insuring personal satisfaction and happiness from the job. If you like dealing with details, you have a better chance of gaining satisfaction from many types of office work or research work.

If your primary interests are in being of service to others, you may find satisfaction in welfare work, medical work, religious work, teaching or nursing. A liking for human relationships of the leadership or persuasive type will be of advantage in vocations requiring management of others and selling of things or ideas.

Personality Traits

PERSONALITY traits must be considered. Your quiet, unassuming personality may be an advantage in some vocations, but will be a handicap in others. Or your buoyant "life-of-the-party" personality may be your most valuable asset if matched with the proper vocational choice.

All these things about you need to be combined and balanced with each other. Finally, they need to be matched with information about the job or job training which you plan to undertake.

This individual analysis of yourself and matching it with job information is a difficult task. You will probably not be able to do it alone. Your teachers and your school counselors may have already helped you and very likely they can help you further. Your community also has organizations with professionally trained vocational counselors and psychologists to assist you with such problems. For information regarding such approved organizations and qualified persons you may call the Center for Psychological Service, Republic 4600.

Bishop Ireton At Marymount Ceremonies

By Lucinda Royse

MARYMOUNT in Virginia is the newest branch of an oak planted 43 years ago in Tarrytown, N. Y. Mother Marie Joseph Butler, late superior general of the Religious of the Sacred Heart of Mary, founded the first Marymount, which has established seven daughter colleges.

Miss Royse

Commencement Day, June 8, will climax a year of varied activities. Classes vied with one another in producing new ideas for mission parties in the fall.

The New Year brought our three-day retreat, fashion shows, symposiums and debates, tea dances and a speech contest. The art department took two first prizes and an honorable mention in the Evening Star's calendar contest and the Diocesan Book Week poster contest. A competitive examination gave Joan Harnett a scholarship to Marymount College at Tarrytown.

Spring saw the last pages of our yearbook, "The Corva," off to the printer. The seniors' trip to Marymount College, a junior-sophomore luncheon and a freshman tea in honor of the Class of 1950 were preludes to Maytime. May 21 was Mayday, another Marymount tradition.

Senior Week will be introduced by the Reverend Mother General's tea for the graduates and the senior-junior prom at the Shoreham Hotel. We will entertain Mother and Dad on Parent's Day, June 4, compete for athletic prizes on field day, June 5, and plant our class tree on Class Day, June 6.

Gaithersburg Awards to 44

By Billie Dawson

GAITHERSBURG High School loses one of its most progressive classes June 20. Of the 44 graduates, 23 plan to further their education by attending college or business school. Forty-two percent plan to attend college. Four graduates, Pat Lynch, Peggy Cross, Betty Harding, Peter Beall won scholarships.

Miss Dawson

The newspaper, the Blue and Gold placed second in the National Contest sponosored by the Quill and Scroll, the journalists honor society.

Pat Lynch and Barbara Riggs won for their 4-H Club work, an all-expense trip, to the National 4-H Club Congress in Chicago. There, Pat won national recognition and Barbara received honorable mention.

Concerts and radio programs by the Glee Clubs, the Christmas dance, the Valentine ball, the variety show, and the senior play have been the highlights of the year for the seniors. More pleasures still to come are the senior prom at the Wardman Park May 29, class day June 8, and the class banquet and dance June 15.

Baccalaureate services will be June 18. Graduation exercises will start at 8 p. m.

Capital Offers Educational Chance

By Elmer Louis Kayser

Dean of University Students, The George Washington University

WASHINGTON is a city of unique educational opportunity. Not only is this true because it is the seat of government, a vast cosmopolitan center and the location of our greatest national shrines and of vast collections of art and literature. It is true because its educational institutions utilize the advantages of their location and adding their own facilities to these advantages, make higher education available on a truly democratic scale.

Dr. Kayser

This is no new condition. The George Washington University moved into the center of the city three quarters of a century ago in order to offer training not only to the full-time student, but also to those who must earn while they learn. Its sister institutions have increasingly used their facilities in expansion in the same field of service.

Today, more than ever, thanks to the remarkable development of the schools and colleges of the Washington area, it is possible for the employed student to avail himself of the opportunities here offered for the finest types of training in the liberal arts and sciences and in many of the professions.

This has been accomplished primarily by the development of courses in the early mornings, late afternoons and on Saturday—times outside of the usual hours of employment. These courses not only parallel the work offered during the day, but in countless cases supplement it, by utilizing as instructors the services of experts engaged themselves in other employment during the day. Thus the institution is able to add to its resident staff distinguished additions from the great reservoir of talent made up by the experts of this government, of foreign governments and the numerous private organizations located here.

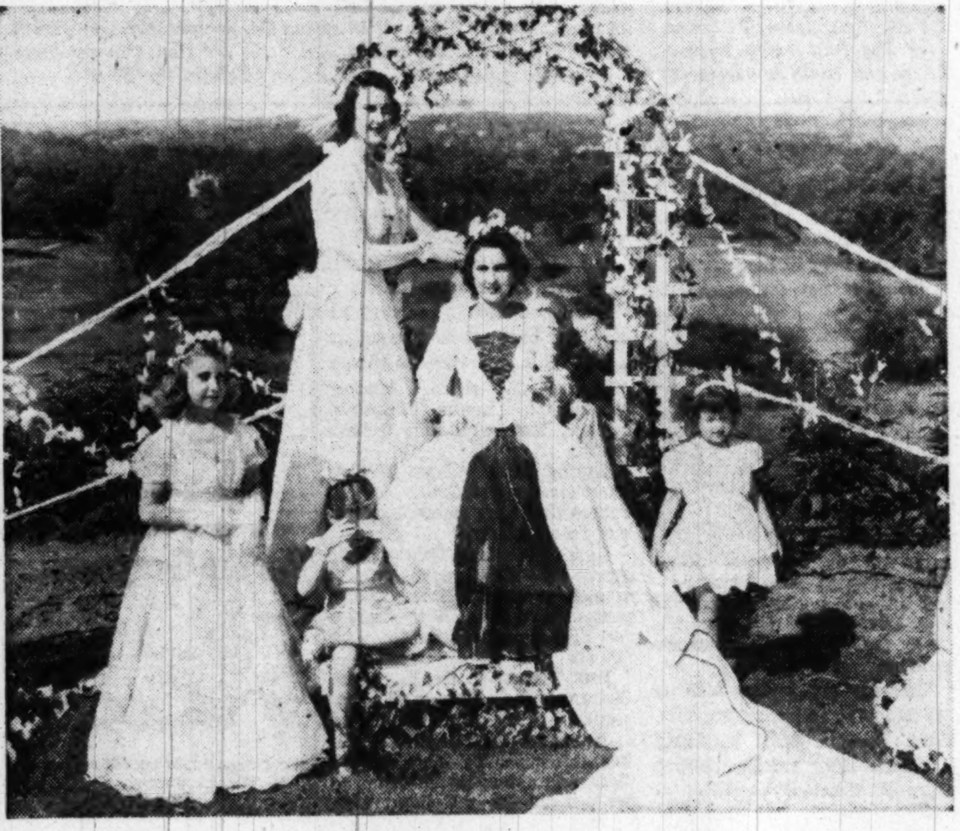
Individual Needs Met

BASICALLY there is little difference educationally between the student who has a job as a night watchman and takes classes in the forenoon and early afternoon and the one who works from 9 to 5 and attends his courses in the early evening hours. It is true, of course, that in some fields, medicine for example, such arrangements are naturally impossible.

But, the universities of the Washington area have been outstanding in the way in which they have arranged their schedules of instruction, running from early morning to night, so as to meet individual needs and place educational opportunity on the widest possible base.

Such educational innovation has, by no means, been restricted to the National Capital area. However, in no other place does a city itself offer greater advantage. To live and work at the seat of the government, to see the vast pageant of history-in-the-making, to note at every turn reminders of our Nation's historic past, this is education in itself.

What the colleges of the city have added by way of carefully organized places of study in various fields available over the day and evening hours, produces here an educational center of truly distinctive character. Not the least important of its features is that the employed student can here find a way under the most favorable circumstances to learn while he earns.



The day was clear enough to see the hills of Maryland rising in the distance beyond the Potomac River and the sun shone warm for the May Day celebration last Sunday at Marymount School on Arlington's North Glebe rd. Sally Day, president of the student body, placed the crown of flowers on the head of Queen Cecelia Perrez. Both will graduate from the school on June 8. Jeana Johnson, 9, was train bearer, and Carol Boyless, 4, and Terry Breeding, 3, who found the sun too bright to look into the camera, were attendants to the queen

How to Pick the Right College

Guy E. Snavely

Executive Director, Association of American Colleges

THE choice of a college is a perplexing problem for many high school graduates and their parents. For some the matter is easily solved because the student automatically attends the alma mater of his father or mother or some other kinsman. Others will choose without much reflection the college or university in or near their home town.

Snavely

The percentage of faculty members with training in the best-known universities is and should be a determining factor in the choice of a college. In those with the greatest enrollments, whether urban or residential, plans have been evolved to permit faculty members to have close contacts with individual students. The inspiration of the great teacher can be gained in any type and size of college.

The college selected will depend often upon the fees and living expenses the student can meet. However, the student should not let the financial problem force his decision. He should investigate ways and means of entering the college of his choice, whether by scholarship aid or through part-time work or a loan.

Check Standards

PARENTS and students alike will be most concerned with the standards of the college of their choice. An accredited college is one that has been approved by a regional standardizing association.

The student will want to know whether the college lives up to the ideals it has outlined in its catalog or other announcements. He will wish to discover if the college is strong in the departments of his particular needs or if it has a successful debating team, good dramatic club, fine glee club or other high grade extracurricular activity in which he may be interested. In short, can he find there the opportunities for his best development?

Visit College

EVERY student should become familiar with the catalog of the college of his choice. A study of the catalog will save much time and confusion at the time of enrollment and will avoid waste of time in arrangement of courses.

If a prospective student is somewhat undecided after a review of the catalog it would be wise to visit the college, thus obtaining a better idea of his prospective living quarters, of the type of student there, of the general tone and atmosphere of the place. He would do well to drop in when the college is not on dress parade as at commencement time.

The acid test of the success of any human institution is the quality of its product. A college can be justly judged in the records of its alumni as well as by the rating given it by the accrediting associations.

Coolidge Graduating Bumper Class of 260

By Muriel Habel

TRADITIONAL senior ceremonies, including the class dinner, the reading of the class will and prophecy, announcement of the popularity poll winners, the play, the prom and commencement exercises, formed the agenda of 260 graduating seniors at Calvin Coolidge High School.

Miss Habel

The Rev. L. Ralph Tabor of the Luther Place Memorial Church, who will lead the invocation, and Mrs. Elviria Magdeburger, from the Board of Education, who will present the diplomas, are to be Coolidge's guests on graduation night, June 14.

The president of the senior class, James Barrett, will preside. The two students who are tied for first place in the class scholastic ranking, Josiah Alford and Lorraine Jorgensen, will give the valedictory and salutatory speeches. Also participating in the program will be musicians William Graham and Betty Fram and the author of the class poem, Burton Boroff.

Seniors will don their prettiest buttons and bows for the semi-annual prom on the evening of June 2 at the Shoreham Hotel.

"The City Slickers and Our Nell," a melodrama by Leland Price, is to be presented June 7.

The class dinner of May 17 saw the reading of the will and prophecy in a program of varied entertainment which also included community singing, a skit, and musical solos. Gary Newman was master of ceremonies.

The prospective graduates voted to donate as their gift to the school a marble bench for the garden which commemorates the sacrifices of Coolidge alumni in World War II.

Many awards and scholarships will be announced at the awards assembly June 1. Included will be gold keys of recognition for achievement in the local division of the National Scholastic writing and art contests for seniors Roger Euster, Muriel Habel, Lawrence Lerner, Gary Newman, Doris Dann, and Edward Miller.

Out of the 260 who are graduating, 178 students—or nearly three fourths of the class—definitely plan to continue their education. This will be Coolidge's eighteenth graduating class.

Winning Year At G. W. High

By Bruce Newell

THIS was a great year for George Washington High School.

Under a new coach, "Phes" Woodson, the football team had its greatest season since 1935. It won nine of its team games, placed second in the Virginia State Championship race, won the Northern Virginia Championship for the third straight year, extended its win record on the G. W. home field to 21 straight and, best of all, won the "Old Oaken Bucket" for keeps. This trophy is presented to the first team to win the annual Thanksgiving Day battle between George Washington and Washington and Lee three straight years.

Newell

Two members of the graduating class, Erwin (Wimpy) Jones and Warren (Smiley) Moore, received all-Virginia State basketball berths. The team posted an 18-8 season record, which included third place in both the Metropolitan and State tourneys.

Cy Painter coached the first J. V. baseball team in the school's history to a great season, showing 11 wins and 1 loss.

Athletic glories weren't all that marked 1950 as a red letter year.

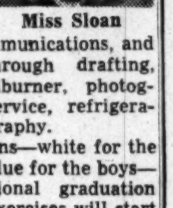
Every group representing the school in the Virginia State Literary Contest won a title.

Commencement Day for the class of 185 will be June 14.

Chamberlain Graduates 40

By Dolores M. Sloan

Forty young men and women will leave the Chamberlain Vocational School June 14, prepared to use their diplomas as a key to careers in business and industry, after receiving both their high school and trade school awards.



Miss Sloan

Their training ranges from baking, barbering, the clerk - typist course, commercial art, communications, and cosmetology through drafting, duplicating, oilburner, photography, radio service, refrigeration, and stenography.

Caps and gowns—white for the girls and navy blue for the boys—are the traditional graduation dress. Indoor exercises will start at 8 p. m.

A tradition of which Chamberlain is very proud is the presentation of a trophy to the outstanding backfieldman and lineman on our football team. These boys are selected by the referees at each game for their fair play and good sportsmanship. The trophies are donated annually by one of the school clubs. The 1949 trophies were won by Charles R. Curtis and Douglas G. Pearson.

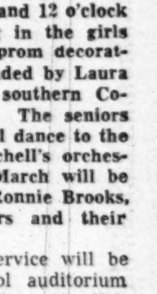
The seniors will hold their prom at Hotel 2400. There is also a class day program.

Seniors have been presented with awards from the D. A. R., the Lions Club, and Killeen Post, No. 5, of the American Legion.

228 Graduate At Anacostia

By Barbara Dubberly

ABOUT 250 seniors at the Anacostia High School, 16th and R sts. se., will receive their diplomas in the school stadium, weather permitting at the graduation exercises at 5 p. m. Tuesday, June 13.



Miss Dubberly

The girls, wearing white caps and gowns, and the boys, dressed in navy blue, will be led from the school to their places in the stadium by the class officers, who include President Ronnie Brooks, Vice President Roland Erickson, Secretary Patricia Sherzer, Treasurer John Wolff and Assistant Treasurer Edward Peterson.

Following an address by a guest speaker, three students, selected in a speech writing competition, will talk five minutes each on "What Washington Means to Me," "What Washington Has Come to Mean to the United States" and "What Washington Has Come to Mean to the World."

The class will sing "Hail Freedom's Hour," by Verdi, before diplomas will be awarded.

A number of senior activities preceded commencement, the first the senior dinner, Thursday, May 18, in the school cafeteria. The theme for the dinner was the "Roaring Twenties," carried out in decorations and in the program. James Ruckman, acted as master of ceremonies.

There were a vocal solo by Barbara Walker, a violin selection by Dolores Rannings, a piano solo by Walter Shropshire and songs by a vocal trio of William Amonett, Robert Harris and James Ruckman. Alice McClannan, Mary Ann Loudon, Barbara Hughes and Constance Henley danced the Charleston. Ellen Amidon and Charles Becker sang a duet and everyone present sang the school song.

The next important senior event will be Class Day on June 9, when graduates will skip classes for a morning of fun. As tradition keeps the Class Day program a secret until its presentation, little is known about it except that a will, a history and a prophecy will be read. A farce, "The Mad Breakfast," also will be offered.

The senior prom, the big, formal social event of the year, will be held between 9 and 12 o'clock Class Day evening in the girls gymnasium. The prom decorating committee, headed by Laura Bowsher, plans a southern Colonial atmosphere. The seniors and their dates will dance to the music of Mel Mitchell's orchestra. The Grand March will be led by President Ronnie Brooks, other class officers and their dates.

Baccalaureate Service will be held in the school auditorium from 4 to 5 p. m. June 11. Following this will be a tea for graduates and their families in the Model Apartment from 5 to 6.

Adelbert W. Lee, member of the Board of Education, will present the seniors with their diplomas in the final exercises.

Miss Jean Moffatt, counselor, and Charles Foster, faculty member, are in charge of arrangements for the baccalaureate and and graduation exercises.

At the graduation, musical selections directed by Miss Eva Henderson, music instructor, and by Horace Butterworth, band director, will be presented.

How to Get Place in Government

By James M. Mitchell

Commissioner
United States Civil Service Commission

YOUNG MEN and women graduating from high school in the Washington area naturally think of the Government as a possible employer, since the area contains more than 200,000 Federal employes in the executive branch alone.

Mitchell

Under the merit system of examinations which has been set up for most Federal positions, only qualified applicants are offered appointments, and the best qualified get jobs before the less well qualified. The Civil Service Commission is the Federal agency which does the recruiting and gives the examinations for most Government agencies. If you want a permanent Government job, you will probably have to apply to the Civil Service Commission at 7th and F sts. nw.; to one of its regional offices or to a board of civil service examiners in an agency.

The commission's local regional office, which serves the States of Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina and the District of Columbia, is in Temporary Building "R" at 4th st. and Jefferson dr. You can go to both of these addresses for information about examinations.

You cannot apply for a civil service job unless an examination for that job is open. It would be a waste of time to accept applications for clerk, for example, if we already had a list of eligibles with the names of enough people on it to fill all the clerk positions that were vacant and that would be vacant for the next year.

At the present time, there are a number of examinations open for which a high school graduate might be able to qualify on the basis of his education. The best opportunity right now to enter the Federal service is as a stenographer or typist. Stenographers particularly are in a shortage category.

Applicants have to show, in an examination, that they can type, and applicants for stenographer must, in addition, demonstrate that they can take dictation at the rate of 80 words a minute. A person who passes the stenographer examination with a high grade could probably get an immediate appointment. The usual entrance salary is $2650 a year.

Other examinations that are open for which a high school graduate might be able to qualify are cartographic draftsman and engineering draftsman, both paying $2200 and $2450 a year. Appointments from these written examinations are in the Naval Hydrographic Office at Suitland, Md., and in other naval activities of the Potomac River Naval Command in and around Washington.

An engineering aid examination is also open, and appointments will be made at the same salaries—$220 and $2450 a year. These jobs are a little farther away, being outside the Washington metropolitan area in Maryland and Virginia, and also in North Carolina and West Virginia. Applicants take a written test.

Other Places Also Open

MANY OTHER examinations are open, of course, but recent high school graduates will find that, for most of them, some experience or additional training is a requirement.

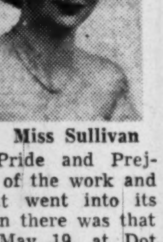
Before filing an application for any examination, you should get a copy of the examination "announcement" and read it carefully. The announcement gives all the information available about the jobs to be filled and what qualifications you must have to fill one of them. If you don't have the qualifications required, don't file an application for that examination.

If no examination is open now for a job for which you are qualified or in which you are interested, don't be discouraged. The Civil Service Commission's offices announce new examinations at frequent intervals. You can keep in touch with what they are by visiting the commission at 7th and F sts. It is also helpful to watch the daily papers.

30 of Seminary's 32 Seniors Pick College

By Marianne Sullivan

IN THE school auditorium June 6, 32 Immaculata Seminary seniors, garbed in white caps and gowns, will march up the aisle to receive their diplomas.



Miss Sullivan

This day will signify years of hard work, fun, and companionship among the girls of the class of '50.

One great event was the senior play, "Pride and Prejudice," and all of the work and satisfaction that went into its production. Then there was that senior picnic, May 19, at Dot Beal's cottage on Beverly Beach.

Friday, May 26, all donned their best apparel, made sure the man of the hour was on hand, and moved on to the senior prom given by the juniors. The whole evening was turned into a "Cinderella Ball" from the silver slipper invitations to the decorations on the walls.

When colleges open their doors in September, 30 of the class will enter. Betty Kling, Patti Kinney, Mary Peyton, Jean Bergling and Margye Maureen are planning to enter training at Georgetown to become nurses.

Trinity College will find Claire Biberstein, Carole Gilchrist, Peggy Inglesby, Ann Reilly and Ruthann Twomey at its door while Mary Ann Sheehy and Diane Mannarino will enter Catholic University's Dramatic School.

Marianna Ring will journey to St. Joseph's College, Emmitsburg, and Pat Mattingly will take up secretarial training at Catawba College, North Carolina.

Patti Clencenin will attend Temple University, Philadelphia, and Janet Hart will major in physical education at George Washington University here in the city.

After graduation, there will be a dinner-dance on the Shoreham Terrace.

Glamour Spots Scarce, but There's Gold Behind Mike

By Mark Evans

WTOP Commentator

DON'T let the so-called "glamour" of radio fool you.

The real opportunity lies behind the microphone, not in front of it.

The so-called "glamour" jobs are hard to get, hard to hold, and often depend on the whim of the public and conditions of the business and entertainment worlds.

I have to climb out of bed at 4:30 a. m. Somebody once said "Early to rise and early to bed makes a man healthy but socially dead." There's nothing less glamorous than a radio performer in front of a microphone at 5:30 in the dawning.

By 7:30 a. m., when I go off the air, I'm beginning to wake up. But by 4 in the afternoon, when I go on again for a half hour, I'm ready to go home and go to sleep. Is this glamour?

• Actually, most of the jobs open to you in radio are behind the scenes.

Girls can become script typists, secretaries, accountants, receptionists, switchboard operators, and writers, to name only a few opportunities.

Few people in radio are more valuable than a helpful, thoughtful, quick secretary well trained in general office duties. And remember, Arthur Godfrey's girl Friday, Mug Richardson, started at this station as a secretary.

If you like to meet the public, start as a receptionist or switchboard operator. Many young women have entered radio via the reception desk.

Both men and women are writers. But don't forget that there is all sorts of writing—publicity, advertising, sales, spot announcements, community service announcements—besides script writing.

There are men secretaries, and very valuable ones, too. But men are more likely to find jobs as accountants, messengers, mail clerks, copy boys, and mimeograph operators. And, after training, as salesmen, assistants to department heads, etc.

The largest single group of workers are the technicians and engineers. We have more than 120 people at WTOP; 32 of them are on the technical staff. This requires previous training, but the rewards are good.

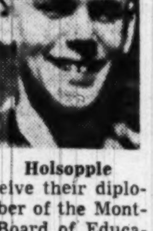
Don't break your heart by trying for the too-few "glamour" jobs. Try for something a bit more possible. Then, when you are inside radio, decide on your goal.

309 Set Mark At Blair High

By James Q. Holsopple

WHEN Montgomery Blair High School holds its graduation exercises at 9:30 a. m. June 20, the end of their high school careers will be recorded by 309 seniors.

Exercises will be held this year in Blair's stadium. In the past, ceremonies have been held in the Silver Theater in Silver Spring. This year's class, however, the largest in the history of the school, cannot be accommodated in any auditorium in the Silver Spring area.



Holsopple

Wearing maroon caps and gowns, the students will receive their diplomas from a member of the Montgomery County Board of Education. The salutatory address will be delivered by Joan Hubbel, while Patti Gary will deliver the valedictory.

A unique method is used to choose commencement speakers at Blair. In place of the customary outside speaker, the senior class elects three of its own members to give addresses. Joyce Duvall, William Diedrick and Percy Goody were chosen.

Charles Brailer and Mary Lasher will receive the award of the local Civitan Club for outstanding citizenship.

Class offices during the past year have been held by William Larimore, president; William Schief, vice president; Patricia Levendoski, secretary; Richard Fene, treasurer.

Seniors have been very active in all manner of activities during the year. The senior play, "My Sister Eileen," a three-act comedy, was performed before a full house both nights that it ran. Starring Ann Hartsfield and Sergene Benson, it carried Jerry Gough in the male lead.

The writing team representing Montgomery Blair tied for first place in the Maryland Scholastic Press Association writing tournament with Western High School of Washington. Members of the winning team were Mary Lou Hanson, Pat Parkman, Charles Brailer and James Holsopple.

Joyce Duvall won over six other candidates to become the Blair Queen. She was crowned at the Christmas Formal, and her court included Tap Hubbel, Patty Levendoski, JoBe Moore, Marlita Scott, Carolyn Wittauer, and Eleanor Wood.

Record Class At Maryland

THE University of Maryland's graduating class this year reaches an all-time high of 2541 students. Registrar Alma Preinkert reports that the 1950 class includes 1464 June and 300 February graduates from schools at College Park and 777 more in the Baltimore divisions. She said the class comprises 57 percent of the 4358 students who entered the university four years ago.

Tenth Class At Greenbelt

By William Colliver

THIS is the tenth and perhaps the last graduating class to leave Greenbelt High School. Upon the completion of the new Prince Georges County high school in University Park, Greenbelt High School will become Greenbelt Junior High School.

Colliver

"The class of '50" has been waiting for it a long time. Through the whirl of parties, proms, games, big and little loves, and yes, even a little work, the class stands 89 strong.

The senior year at G. H. S. has been the best year, upholding school traditions, in recreation, and at work. There was the basketball team, matching the high standards of sportsmanship set up by former teams, winning 10 games and losing 9, and the newly formed football squad, the first in the history of the school, playing against tough competition.

There was the biggest school social event of the year—All Greenbelt Night, where, following two basketball games with a traditional rival, the queen for the year, always a senior girl, and her court are crowned.

Next came the senior play, this year "One Foot In Heaven," which broke all attendance records ever set for any kind of dramatic or musical production here. There was the long awaited and much looked forward to senior Banquet.

Next the annual Senior Skip Day, where the seniors just fail to show up for school. This year it was the beach, managing to return with finer cases of sunburn than any other senior class. Then the traditional senior assembly, put on by the senior class, and portraying the four-year history of the class. Senior assembly, also sees the awarding of all school and athletic letters.

Baccalaureate services will be held on Sunday, June 11, and graduation, Wednesday evening June 14. This year, for the first time, graduation exercises will be held outdoors, the boys in blue caps and gowns, the girls in white.

Fairfax Prom Set for June 2

By Pat Robinson

WE WILL never forget you, dear Fairfax, for the many wonderful memories you have furnished for our "high school album of yesterday." How could we ever forget that wonderful senior year!

We will remember senior week that starts with the prom on Friday night, June 2, given to us by those hard-working Juniors. The gym will be completely disguised and look lovely, but we'll never admit that it is half as nice as the one we gave as Juniors. Then there will be baccalaureate on Sunday night. "Honor Your Senior Day" will be next on the agenda. That night there will be a barbecue and a festive mood.

The next day we will take over the school and do a better job than the regular help. "Down with the teachers" will be the cry of the other students. This will be followed by the Senior Banquet that night. The day now draws closer. The class night program will succeed the banquet and won't we be surprised to find out who is the most popular! We will listen so attentively to the prophecy. The Juniors, who will attend class night, will hear our last will and testament. Somehow, we will find time between all this to practice for commencement. One of the funniest times of all will be Senior Hat Day.

Thursday, June 8—graduation—we wondered if that day would ever arrive. The boys will wear navy caps and gowns; the girls will dress in white—as we approach the stage, we will walk on clouds. And when we hear the principal call our names, cold chills will begin to dance up and down our spines. Will our feet carry us across the stage? As we march from the stage, we will be careful to notice that our classmates who had sworn that when they left they would jump for joy, will be just the ones to have a tear or two trickle down their cheeks.

Western Has 197 Seniors

By Sureva Codel

OF Western High School's 197 graduating seniors, 80 percent will pursue higher education, 65 percent having stated their intentions of going to four-year colleges and universities, while 15 percent will take further training in specialized fields.

Miss Codel

The class of 1950, smallest in the school's history since 1928, includes a substantial number of scholarship winners. Boyd Evison received a scholarship to the NROTC training course at the college of his choice; Betsey Bradley, a scholarship to Wellesley; Shirley Megeath, a scholarship in French to Rockford College; Constance Plain an honorary scholarship to Northwestern University. President of the Debate Club, Eleanor Edlow, won a competitive speech scholarship to George Washington University.

Donald Dean and Leonard Fay have received athletic scholarships to Maryland University

The coeditors of the school paper were among those bringing honors to Western. Minerva Heller, recipient of the Soroptimist Medal for leadership, scholarship and service to the school, and class, valedictorian has been awarded a scholarship to Smith College. Ellen Sincoff received a four-year scholarship to George Washington University.

Under direction of its editors, the Western Breeze, the school newspaper, received an all-American rating from the National Scholastic Press Association, as well as awards from the Columbia Scholastic Press Association. John H. Miller, winner of a Yale scholarship, led the Westerner staff in producing an outstanding yearbook of 130 pages.

School and city-wide awards will be disclosed June 1. Special certificates will be presented Ernie Poore, State winner in the sports division of the Quill and Scroll writing contest, and to Gail Dunne and Helen Biren, first and second in the District division of the United Nations contest.

Mrs. Philip Sidney Smith, a member of the Board of Education, will present diplomas at the fifty-eighth commencement ceremonies at 4:30 p. m., June 15.

The top 10 honor students are Carl Behrens, Betsey Bradley, Minerva Heller, Albert Holtz, John Miller, Constance Plain, Ellen Sincoff, Sybil Speier, Roberta Wadley, and Philip Work. Class officers are Bill Mushake, president; Roberta Reaser, vice president; Margaret Reaser, secretary; and Joe Forest, treasurer.

The senior prom will be held in the West Ball Room of the Shoreham Hotel, from 9-12, June 9. Senior Class Night exercises will be at 8 p. m., June 12, in the school auditorium.

Oxon Granting 53 Diplomas

By Emily Wood

ON June 13, 53 seniors will say goodbye to Oxon Hill High School. An indoor, cap-and-gown ceremony is planned, with seven members of the class making speeches centering around the theme, "Clear Thinking for Democratic Living." The senior memorial will be presented at that time. Baccalaureate services will be held on the Sunday afternoon prior to graduation.

Our accomplishments in the athletic field have been outstanding this year. After winning the soccer championship in this district, Oxon walked off with the class "B" basketball cup. Athletic letters were awarded this year for the first time at Oxon Hill. The girls' basketball team also received letters. One of the highlights of the year was the traditional "All Sports Night." As king and queen of the senior class, Paul Cross and Rita Perrygo were crowned. Members of the court were Jean Summers, Nancy Martin, Betty Williams, Emily Wood, John Brady, Donald Hayes, Vernon Herath, and William Thompson.

Membership in the National Honor Society went to Catherine Pope, Luana Pope, James Barrett, William Thompson, Patricia Johnson, Billie Jean Thomas, Emily Wood, Rita Perrygo, and Joyce Claspell. In addition, Betty Lewey, Robert Welch, Nancy Martin, and Alexander Fortunato are members of Quill and Scroll, International Honorary Society for High School Journalists.

A Public Service, Not 'Ad Racket'

By Henry J. Kaufman
Henry J. Kaufman and Associates

AN ADVERTISING man may be a copywriter, layout designer, media salesman, direct-mail expert, advertising manager, account executive or one of many other specialists. The boy or girl who wishes to get into advertising may choose from a wide field of activities.

KAUFFMAN

Doors no longer remain closed to those who lack talent for creative writing or art work. Such a person may possess talents for noncreative but equally important and interesting kinds of advertising work. Perhaps he likes statistics and research or shows ability in merchandising, marketing and selling. If so, advertising has a place for him. And, like any other business, advertising employs those skilled in accounting, management, clerical work, etc.

In general, there are two kinds of jobs in advertising. One has to do with the actual making of the advertisement; the other, with the selling of advertising. Within each of these two broad categories may be found a wide variety of activities calling for a wide variety of talents.

Premiums are paid for exceptional talents in each of the primary functions. Exceptional talents are worth more because they lower the cost of promotion and help the advertiser achieve broader distribution and consumption at lower costs per unit-of-sale.

Advertising agencies and advertising departments have become organizations of serious business counselors. Advertising is a means to an end—the profitable growth of the advertiser's business—and, of even greater importance, the lowering of the cost of goods, the raising of living standards, the increased usage of raw materials and the expansion of employment.

Advertising does these things, and impressionable, idealistic minds will pursue such training with greater eagerness and better results if thoroughly convinced that, in so doing, they are performing a useful service to mankind—as well as to themselves.

I would not employ a boy or girl who wants to get into "the advertising racket," but I've an open mind and heart for the applicant seriously concerned with the broader distribution of goods at lower costs to the consumer.

Lyric Pledge At Maryland

By Helen Heffner
Maryland Park High School

LOCATED near Seat Pleasant, Maryland Park High School has 819 students and a faculty of 35. The graduation exercises this year will be held in the school auditorium at 8 p. m. June 14, when 127 graduates will receive their diplomas from William S. Schmidt, Assistant Superintendent of Prince Georges County Schools. Mrs. Helen H. Brashears, principal, will present the theme of the program, "Youth of America." The Class of 1950 will then make its pledge to the future through a program of choral speech combined with the music of the glee clubs and a cappella choir.

Heffner

Formal recognition of the class valedictorian, Jane Hutchison, the presentation of citizenship awards to Audrey Moreland and Joseph Suit, and the last-minute announcement of the highly contested and coveted award of Outstanding Student of the Class will be the evening highlights.

The seniors leave a record of which they feel proud. Thirty-five leave positions on varsity teams; 13 have been active members of the glee clubs and a cappella choir; 3 have played with the school band; 9 have given outstanding performances with the speech department; and 7 have served in student government positions.

The class officers are Wilbur Lare, president; Joseph Suit, vice president; Marian Moyer, secretary, and Edna Dulin, treasurer.

Randolph-Macon To Graduate 61

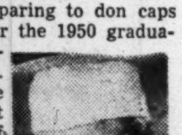
Front Royal, Va.—Randolph-Macon Academy's fifty-eighth session closes Monday morning with 61 seniors to receive diplomas from Col. John C. Boggs, principal. Representative Burr P. Harrison of Virginia, will deliver the commencement address.

The final exercises will also bring to a close a full weekend of activities which include exhibition drills, a band concert, dance, senior luncheon, and dress parade. Maj. Gen. Charles I. Carpenter, Chief of United States Air Force Chaplains, is guest clergyman for the Baccalaureate sermon Sunday morning at the Front Royal Methodist Church.

8 to Finish At St. Mary's

By Kay Jones

THE SENIOR CLASS of St. Mary's Academy in Alexandria is preparing to don caps and gowns for the 1950 graduation ceremonies. Though there are only eight members of the present graduating class, we have participated fully in all the customary activities of the senior year.



Miss Jones

In September we wore our white caps and gowns for the first time. During the morning of one of the first schools days, the students gathered in St. Mary's chapel to receive Holy Communion at the mass that officially opened the 1949-50 school year.

Extra curricular activities brought welcome breaks in the hours of study. Freshmen and seniors alike enjoyed the amusing antics of the freshman initiation. Many hours of practice and prayer combined to make the senior play, "Come Out of the Kitchen," a great success.

For weeks we anticipated the traditional dances, such as the Thanksgiving "Turkey Trot" and the Christmas "Holly Hop." "Tulip Time," the operetta presented by St. Mary's Glee Club, was a big event on our calendar.

Then at last, the Junior-Senior Prom. Few of us will forget that evening; we danced in the auditorium, which was lit only by softly-glowing candles, and decorated with shining stars and a huge glittering moon.

Another traditional event dear to the hearts of St. Mary's graduates is the annual May Procession. The white-gowned seniors, following the singing students, who were in full St. Mary's uniform, escorted the May Queen and her attendants up the winding path to the flower-decked grotto of Our Lady of Lourdes.

G. U. Prep Now 161 Years Old

By Brockett Muir

WITH THE graduation exercises of 1950 on June 4, Georgetown Prep School completes 161 years of educational service in the Washington area. Until 1919 located in old Georgetown, this country's oldest Catholic Prep school is now situated on Rockville Pike in Garrett Park, Md.

Naturally the school has fallen heir to many traditions which have helped create a unique spirit among students and faculty. The present graduating class is glad that it felt this spirit and hopes that it has done its part to perpetuate it. Graduation always finds the seniors with a lump in the throat, for it is then that they realize how much a part of the school they really had become. The 1950 class can look back proudly at its successes and wistfully at unforgettable memories.

In 1947 and 1948, Georgetown Prep finished first of all the Jesuit schools in the examinations for scholastic aptitude given by the province board for the Eastern Atlantic States.

The 1950 class will also recall many extra-curricular achievements in their years at Georgetown. The frequent plays by the Prep Players, the awards they won in one-act contests, the Shakespearean offering as a feature of graduation week, are pleasant to recollect. They cannot but think back of the triumphs enjoyed by the Philalethic Debating Society, which won the championship of its league during the present year.

But being boys in a school where everyone must take part in athletics, they will enjoy most vividly the memory of seasonal sports, and especially the victories; the Catholic League championship in baseball last year and the possibility of another this year; the Metropolitan Golf honors in 1949 and again this year; the undefeated football team in 1948.

There are many things to remember about the year just past besides competitive victories. Seniors always look forward to and remember afterward the annual Alumni Day football game. The Fathers-Sons banquet, always a success, this year was better than ever. The newly formed "G" Club, founded by the present senior group, enhanced this evening's celebration by presenting athletic awards to members of the smaller teams who starred. The Senior Prom in the winter and the Junior Prom, a graduation special in honor of the departing Preppers, are also big days in a graduate's life. Perhaps they will treasure more insignificant memories—John Gregg's famous store at recess; "mail call" and movie nights for the boarders; the "Little Hoya" over lunch; May devotions around the garden of Our Lady in the early morning; finding the main verb in a Vergilian sentence.

Whatever their thoughts as the 57 graduates accept their diplomas from Father Maloney, the headmaster, the graduates are proud of their school and of their record at Georgetown Prep.

Central, the city's oldest high school, will disband with graduation exercises this year. Ralph Gramsley and Karen Ahlgren perch on the balustrade outside the Clifton st. entrance

An Institution Disbanded

It's Really Farewell For Central Seniors

By Velyn Brooke
Central High School

WITH the graduation of the June class of the 1950 Central, the oldest school in Washington, will disband after 70 eventful years.

In 1880, the city felt the need for a combined high school. It joined the Grammar School for Boys and the Grammar School for Girls in a building at 7th and O sts. nw. Although applicants had to pass a written examination at first, the enrollment increased rapidly, and after 10 years a wing was added.

That was not enough; and in 1890 the student body was split into four groups: Eastern, Western, Central and Business, now Roosevelt. Shop students were moved to McKinley Tech in 1902 to provide more space for occupational training.

In 1916, the school moved to a new building at 13th and Clifton st. nw. The spade used to break the ground and the old brass handbell used to announce the passing of classes are kept in the school vault, along with the records of all persons who have been graduated from the Hilltop. Such notables as J. Edgar Hoover, Lieut. Gen. Brehon B. Somerville, Dr. Alfred Sze, Judge Brice Clagett and Dr. Hobart Corning are among these.

More than 47,000 students have attended Central.

In those 70 years, Central has won innumerable contests. Among the many trophies on display in the cases on the first floor are the Michigan Plaque, the Princeton Cup, the Eastern Interscholastic Basketball Cup and the University of Maryland Interscholastics Point Trophy.

The students and alumni have done much to make the school more beautiful. Dr. Sao-he Alfred Sze had the M. Ella Morgan Room furnished in memory of Miss Morgan, who was his English teacher at Central.

The library walls are decorated with a frieze of the Holy Grail in memory of the boys who gave their lives in World War I.

In the spring, dogwood, forsythia and redbud bloom on the terraces.

As Central has always been noted for its fine school spirit, the students will leave the building in June with deep regret. If, as someone has said, immortality is living on in the memory of someone, Central will never die.

10 Finishing At Vocational

By Margaret Bell

MARGARET MURRAY Washington Vocational High school was organized to train high school students to work with their hands. The school offers a variety of trades, and 104 young men and women will be graduated June 13, ready to take jobs for which they have been trained.

The future is secure for the Vocational graduate of 1950. The senior class has chosen for its motto, "The future belongs to those who prepare for it." Each student has some worthwhile ambition in mind; many girls will go to Gallinger Municipal Hospital to finish their training in practical nursing; others will become beauty operators, bakers or chefs, nursery assistants, dressmakers, tailors, or power machine operators. Some specialized in costume design, household operations, drycleaning and dyeing, and they will soon be well employed.

Some students will receive a diploma on the completion of their high school requirements, and the remainder will be given trade certificates indicating that they are proficient in their trade. High school graduates must take academic and related work in addition to their trade, and the trade certificate requires only work in the trade.

Before graduating, the seniors will enjoy the traditional ceremonies, formal and informal. One afternoon they will be officially inducted into the Alumni Association. Another day they will leave their classes for the annual outing. Signs of the prom can already be seen in the sewing rooms where spring formals are taking shape. Finally, June 13 brings graduation in the auditorium of the John F. Cook school.

29 in Class At St. Paul's

By Ernest Szetela

TO THE strains of "Pomp and Circumstances," 29 graduates dressed in the traditional caps and gowns will march into the auditorium of St. Paul's Academy, Tuesday, June 6, at 8 p. m.

Ernest Szetela

The girls will be robed in white, followed by the boys in royal blue. Graduates include: John Berg, Benjamin Bowie, Bernard Casey, John Cassidy, Leo Clark, Robert Collins, William Dunne, Joseph Fernandez, Catherine Fitzgerald, Peter Gajewski, Dorothy Gomes, Robert Granados, Wilbur Healey, James Himes, Macario Ignacio, Francis Jennings, John Knott, Claudette Leveque, Patricia Maloney, Claire Manning, Donley Murphy, Richard Proctor, Ramona Rowland, Robert Rutkowski, Mary Shook, Jane Simmes, Jane Stevens, Ernest Szetela, and James Warner.

The St. Paul's boys' basketball team enjoyed a successful season, mentored by Don Hillock, Johnny Cassidy making the All-star Prep. However, the girls outplayed the boys, copping the runner-up trophy in their league. Catherine Fitzgerald, captain of the girls' team, received special mention, while Patricia Maloney was selected for the All-star team.

Scholastic honors are many. For the fourth consecutive year, a Paulite has won the first prize in the boys' division of the Archdiocesan C. S. M. C. Oratorical Contest, the Archbishop Curley Memorial Trophy. The winner this year is Macario Ignacio. In addition, another Paulite, Claudette Leveque, took the first prize in the girls' division, an an identical trophy. Ernest J. Szetela won in the Washington division of the "Selling As a Career" essay contest.

Six of a graduating class of 29 are members of the National Honor Society; J. Cassidy, C. Fitzgerald, C. Leveque, P. Maloney, J. Stevens, and E. Szetela. Members of the Quill and Scroll National Honor Society are: J. Cassidy, C. Fitzgerald, D. Gomes, R. Granados, M. Ignacio, C. Leveque, R. Proctor, R. Rowland, J. Stevens, E. Szetela, and J. Warner.

Claudette Leveque has won a four-year scholarship to Dunbarton College. At the commencement exercises, the American Legion Citizenship Award will be given to Patricia Maloney and John Cassidy. The Catholic War Veterans Citizenship Award will go to Robert Rutkowski.

Catherine Fitzgerald and Johnny Casidy won first and second in the Mackin Memorial Essay Contest. Claudette Leveque received honorable mention in the Hamilton Bank Music Contest. In the National Association of French Teachers' Contest, French medals were awarded to regional winners, Claudette Leveque and Jane Stevens.

The third place national winner of the Quill and Scroll Current Events Contest was Claudette Leveque. National Poetry Association awards were given to Ernest Szetela and Macario Ignacio whose winning poems are to be published in the 1950 Anthology of Poetry.

Herndon Hails Its Teamwork

By Peggy Bear

ALTHOUGH its graduating class has only 10 members, Herndon High School has upheld the traditions so dear to the hearts of every senior. In many instances there has been more enthusiasm over the activities than in past years, for every student has felt the need for his cooperation, and has taken a more active part in the absence of an "overpowering" senior class.

The Rotary Club is planning the senior banquet, and the juniors buzz with excitement over the approaching prom.

On June 9, these 10 seniors will march into the auditorium to the familiar "Pomp and Circumstance" and will proudly receive their hard-earned diplomas.

We are all proud of the full athletic program which has been carried on, even without the "big guys." The football team did better than last year, and the other teams have done equally fine jobs. Where the teams were lacking in size, the confidence of the students backing them made up for it.

The annual homecoming day was preceded by a spirited campaign for queen, which resulted in a winner of whom we were proud. Along with the enjoyment of this event we gained more profit than usual. We can at last see our dream of bleachers coming true, as we purchase our first section.

Damascus Has Eventful Year

By Julian King, Jr.

THE graduating class of Damascus High has had an eventful school year. The senior play, a highlight, was "June Mad," a three-act comedy.

King

Happiest time of the year, but one touched with sadness, was the transfer to a modern, new school building. The building was completed in February of 1950 and the first day in the new school was February 27. The seniors are the first graduating class from this new unit.

An event planned through the whole term was the class trip to New York City. Accompanying the seniors were Miss Nora Frances Lunch and Weldon G. Dawson. Twenty-seven seniors made the journey.

The Junior-Senior Prom on June 2 will take place in the high school auditorium.

Dunbar Ends Big Year

By Bessie McLester

IT'S BEEN a great year at Dunbar for the Class of '50, packed with study and fun, enjoyment experienced only in high school.

Miss McLester

The eight-game football season was highlighted by the homecoming ceremonies over which Elizabeth Armstead presided as queen.

The basketeers had a memorable year, taking trips to New Jersey and North Carolina. "Miss Basketball," Arvella Carr, reigned over the interracial game on February 22. The girls' basketball team, Crimson Waves, finished their best year. The track team participated in meets in Philadelphia, Bridgeton and New York.

Seniors participating in other extra-curricular activities have made a fine record for themselves. Thirty-three were inducted into the National Honor Society. Seniors have successfully managed Liber Anni, the News Reel, Masque and Gavel, Quill and Scroll, and the Athletic Association. Seniors pioneered in the organization of the Dunbar chapters of National Thespians, the first in Washington, and of the Future Business Leaders of America.

Many seniors won recognition in essay and art centests. John Fitzhugh in "I Speak for Democracy" and Charles Jones in the school's Elks' finals won awards in oratory. Fan Nell Daniels won first place in the finals of the high school musical talent contest, receiving a $500 scholarship.

The Cadet Corps, continually adding to Dunbar's prestige, has the highest regimental positions filled by Col. Wendell Holloway and Lieut. Col. Mary E. Williams. Capt. Irene Crawford and Capt. Helen Hollamond led companies which won first and second places respectively in the annual girls' competitive drill.

There were many special events to raise money for class activities, the seniors sponsored a talent show with a television motif. There was Senior Day, on which the prospective graduates, wearing distinctive attire, conducted an assembly program in the morning followed by an afternoon of square dancing. On Student Day, Herman Robertson was student principal with Rosalie Gaskins and David Eaton managing the offices of the assistant principals. Doris Warfield was crowned queen at the May Day exercises.

Now all are eagerly awaiting graduation. Class Night is scheduled for June 7 and the senior prom for June 9. Then for the first time, graduation exercises will be outdoors in Brooks Stadium on June 14 at 6 p.m. The girls will wear white caps and gowns and the boys wear either blue caps and gowns or cadet uniforms.

After greduation, 75 percent of the 398 graduates plan to enter college. So far, two Dunbar students have been awarded scholarships: James Nicolson to Harvard and Dartmouth and Ruth Smith to Vassar.

26 in Class At Woodward

By Herbert Bohn Devries

TWENTY-SIX boys will be graduated from the Woodward School June 7 in ceremonies scheduled for 5 p. m. in the Department of Interior auditorium.

Devries

Clarence Morgan is the valedictorian and Dwight Black is salutatorian. Post-high school ambitions are varied and, in some cases, undecided. Clarence is entering Tufts College on a scholarship to study medicine. Dwight and others hope to take up engineering.

Espirit 'de corps' and the social angle are traditions of the school. In the latter realm, there will be the Senior Prom June 2, the Field Day June 6, and finally the receiving of the sheepskin.

The Field Day will begin on the Ellipse on the morning of June 6. The afternoon will be spent in the assembly hall of Woodward where awards will be presented. The awards will be many and varied, with Morgan to receive the Bausch and Lomb Science Award.

Purvis on Committee Of Business Research

Elgie G. Purvis, director of Strayer College, has been elected to serve on the "accreditation authority" of Business Education Research Associates.

The 12 member committee will inspect private business schools to see that they meet educational standards.

Fuchs Gets Full Time Position at A. U.

Herbert Fuchs, 2220 49th st. nw., lecturer at the Washington College of Law of American University, will assume full-time duties as an assistant professor in September.

Fuchs, formerly a solicitor with the National Labor Relations Board, was at one time the public member of the Nonferrous Metals Commission.

By Harry Goodwin—The Washington Post

Seniors at McKinley High School follow an old custom of autographing each others' mortar board caps. Harry Moul, class president and Tech football star, leans over to collect signatures from Darlene Patterson, Kathleen Mills, Jean Ann Bennett and William Yeatman

M'Kinley High Picks June 19

By Frances Emsweller

McKINLEY High School will hold its graduation exercises in the auditorium at 8 p. m. June 14.

Miss Emsweller

Presiding over the class of 285 are Harry Moul, president; Bill Mockabee, vice president; Sue Garceau, secretary; Edward Jackson, treasurer; Eddie Hudgins, sergeant-at-arms.

So far the senior class has planned its senior prom and informal dance. The prom will be given in the Washington Hotel, June 7, while the informal dance will be held in the Tech gym June 12.

Senior hats, which are an old Tech tradition, were given out on May 2 and many seniors adorned their hats with strange objects. Two other traditions are the Senior Assembly and the wearing of caps and gowns at the graduation exercises. The Senior Assembly will be presented to the student body on June 9.

A number of students will continue their education on scholarships. They are John Hoffsommer, at the University of Pennsylvania; Harry Moul and Jean Ed Smith at Princeton; John Forsythe and Clifford Thompson at Swarthmore; Edwin Cummings at De Pauw University; Harry Hazlehurst at Pennsylvania State; Margret Beller and Jere Stern at George Washington University; Fred Caldwell at Benjamin Franklin University, and Rita Botkin at American University.

The Trainer football team this year earned the runner-up place in the District championship play-off. Charles Green, a member of the senior class, merited the guard position on the all-high team.

The basketball team also excelled this year by capturing both the District and Metro championships.

Day Camp

BEAUVOIR, Washington Cathedral's elementary school, will conduct a summer day camp program this summer for boys and girls of three to nine years of age. The six week session will open June 5. Remedial reading instruction and individual tutoring will be available for chldren who have dropped behind in their studies.

19th Class Last At Mt. Rainier

By James Davis

THE graduating class of 1950 will be the nineteenth and last from Mount Rainier High School. The 1951 class will finish high school training in the new Nicholas Orem High School now nearing completion.

James Davis

Many of the seniors took an active part in the athletics of Mount Rainier High. Football made its debut in Prince Georges County high schools this past season and the Mount Rainier squad made a creditable showing, losing but one game and placing second in the county standings.

While some seniors were winning their letters in athletics, the talents of others were absorbed by the school newspaper, the Spyglass, and by the production of the yearbook, "The Yellow Jacket."

Some were busy with school clubs and in producing a number of stage plays. Others devoted their time to planning the dances. The dramatic performances "Life With Father," and "Peggy and the Pirate" were presented before packed audiences.

The school year for the seniors is climaxed by the activities of May and June. May, along with exams, ushered in the Coronation Dance with the selection of King and Queen of the school, the Senior Prom, the class trip, class night, class parties, and the ininevitable rehearsals for the graduation exercises.

Caps and gowns will be worn for the ceremonies, the girls wearing white and the boys blue.

Twenty-eight of the 76 graduates are planning to attend college and others will attend business schools.

June 11 Is Day At Notre Dame

By Anna Robinson

EIGHTY-THREE graduates of the Academy of Notre Dame receive their diplomas in the Chapel of Trinity College, Sunday, June 11.

Notre Dame's softball team became city Champions in the C.Y.O. Girls' High School Tournament.

Jill Tisdale, winner of the citywide contest of the Sons of the American Revolution, was given $50 and a trophy for the school.

Second place in the annual French contest was given to Patricia Reynolds by the Ambassador of France.

Receiving the Soroptimist award, Patricia Durden, president of the Student Council, was rewarded for her leadership, scholastic achievement, and service to the school. Another prize requiring the same qualifications, the Faculty Award went to Mary Beth Engert, Dramatic and French Play awards were given to Patricia Morris and Jeanne Cartier respectively.

This year The Dome acquired three firsts in highschool journalism. Rated first place in the Columbia Scholastic Press Association and the Catholic Press Association, it was the only Catholic school paper in Washington to receive mention for creative writing.

Immaculate Graduating 36

By Mary Lou Zollars

THIRTY-SIX seniors of Immaculate Conception Academy will walk under the traditional arch of flowers on Baccalaurate Sunday June 4, at Immaculate Conception Church. The mass will be offered by the Rev. Joseph E. Gedra, pastor. Claudia Thompson, senior, will read the Act of Consecration to the Sacred Heart and present a bouquet of red roses.

A picnic in the Blue Ridge Valley May 18, the procession May 21 and a prom at the Shoreham Hotel May 26 are three of the varied events preceding Immaculate's eighty-fifth commencement, to be held June 7.

The commencement exercises will begin with a greeting by Geraldine Borowski and Hilda Mudd, followed by the Speech Choir's selection, "The Spirit of the Everlasting Girl."

The graduates are: Geraldine Borowski, Phyllis Boyce, Alta Brown, Johanna Campbell, Eileen Carroll, Margaret Coffman, Betty Cullins, Kathryn Dalton, Betty Ann Frick, Beatrix Gadwa, Barbara Harrison, Dolores Holt, Margaret Lantz, Rita Lavin, Madeleine Mayo, Agnes McKenna, May Morris, Hilda Mudd, Rosemary Murphy, Joan O'Neill, Pauline Perello, Teresa Pompa, Theresa Popolo, Mary Ellen Quill, Patricia Richards, Irene Shaw, Janet Smith, Maura Straub, Dorothy Sullivan, Patricia Taffe, Claudia Thompson, Elizabeth Toepher, Bernadette Welch, Jude Ann Whelan, Rose Zangla, and Mary Lou Zollars.

Phelps Class Sets Record

By Austin Brown

RELATIVES and friends will witness the graduation of Phelps' largest senior class when 75 capped and gowned young men will receive their diplomas and shop certificates at commencement exercises in the auditorium of the Young Elementary School.

Austin Brown

Much history has been made and many awards have been won in the scholastic and athletic fields by members of this class of 1950. A few such achievements are the originating of an Honor Society which was feted at a buffet style luncheon at Armstrong High School recently, winning of awards in the annual Washington Science Clubs, Science Fairs.

The Clark Griffith baseball trophy was won in 1947 and 1949. The track team has won trophies at the Penn relays and the Bridgeton meets. The football and basketball teams have also acquired several awards, including the S.A.H.H.S.A.C. football championship in 1949.

The greatest accomplishment was made by the cadet corps. Under the leadership of Maj. James Lyles, the Phelps Fifth Battalion marched off with first place in the battalion competition for the first time since the formation of the unit.

Class night will feature many members of the Class of '50 starring in two one-act plays which are entitled "Buddy Buys an Orchid" and "Play Ball!"

Phelps is considered a terminal educational institution. Although most of the graduates will go into their various occupations, several will enter institutions of higher learning in the fall.

The most outstanding member of the class scholastically is James Lyles. Lyles is a member of the Honor Society, president of the senior class and major in the Cadet Corps. Lyles plans to enter Howard University in September.

Raymond Hill, a versatile athlete, is a letterman in baseball, football, track and basketball. Hill may attend the University of Denver in Denver, Colo.

Gywnn Park Graduates 31

By John Mathews

THE STUDENTS of Gwynn Park High School found time between studies to enjoy themselves during the year. The outstanding social affairs were the Christmas dance, the Valentine dance and the St. Patrick's Day dinner.

The records of our athletic teams in competition with other schools were not too impressive. We have soccer, basketball and baseball teams, but this just wasn't their year.

The first activity of the graduating class was the senior play in November, "Our Hearts Were Young and Gay," by Cornelia Otis Skinner and Emily Kimbrough. Then the class turned its attention to the editing of the yearbook. Now the seniors are anxiously waiting the important event that will come with the month of June.

On June 2, the senior class will be the guests of the junior class at the Junior-Senior Prom. Next will be their three-day trip to New York beginning June 7.

Commencement exercises will be held in the auditorium at 8 p. m. on June 14, with Dr. Earl T. Hawkins, president of Towson College, as speaker. Graduating will be 18 girls in white gowns, and 13 boys in gowns of dark green.

A few of the graduates are going on to college. Most of the girls who have taken the commercial course will seek jobs. Several of the boys who live on farms will continue to work with the soil.

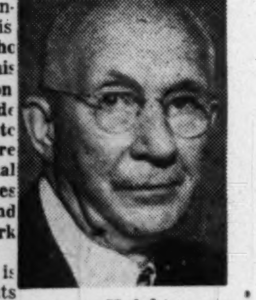
Night School Best Course for Many

By C. C. Knight

Director, Department of Evening and Summer Schools, Divisions 1-9, District Public Schools

IF WE examine the lists of students who are completing high school this year we shall find that their plans for the future may serve as a basis for dividing them into educational groups. Many plan to go to institutions of higher learning with no interruption. Others will spend a year on reviewing and adding to their secondary work. Many will go to work and will continue their schooling on a part-time basis.

What can we offer the boy or girl who must work while he fills the gaps in his previous training, or extends his education or prepares himself to enter a new trade in order to avoid unemployment due to technological advances? Very few who are at work fail to find that some additional school work is necessary. In some cases the employer will provide for the need and give the additional training during work hours.



Knight

For the great majority the recourse is the evening school. About 800 students register each year in the public evening schools. Of these possibly 2000 are high school graduates. They are learning trades, acquiring knowledge in subject matter related to their trades, learning or reviewing shorthand and typing, or obtaining general education. Nearly 800 who are high school graduates are enrolled in the vocational schools. Some of the labor unions are now requiring that their apprentices be high school graduates.

Have you looked at "schools" on the yellow pages of the telephone book? Several pages of advertising set forth the variety of training that is offered for all of the groups of students who have been mentioned. More than 400 institutions in the District of Columbia have been approved for GI training and there is not much that high school graduates need to learn, which is not offered by some of them.

Maret Shows Rapid Growth

By Dorothy Winn

MARET School was founded in 1911 by the Maret sisters who were French born, and the above began with a group of three pupils as contrasted to an enrollment of 185 pupils, of whom 17 will be graduated July 7 in a program at the Shoreham Hotel.

Miss Winn

The highlights of this year were the annual Bazaar for the benefit of the building fund, the Latin-American Fiesta and the publication of The Maretian, the senior year-book.

Of the 17 graduates, 11 of the girls have already been accepted by colleges, including Smith, Barnard and Bryn Mawr; two are entering nurses' training, one is to model and one will continue with her dramatic training. One member, who entered the school at the age of 5, has received a scholarship to Smith College.

The members of the graduating class will wear white formal dresses and carry arm boquets of red roses.

Maret is proud of being an international school. In its student body of pupils from 21 countries, These early contacts with people of many nations should help them become, in adult life, better world citizens.

Record Class At Holy Names

By Pat Shipman

COMMENCEMENT exercises at the Academy of the Holy Names, Silver Spring, were held Sunday, May 28, at 4 p. m. in St. Gabriel's Church, Washington. Presiding was the Most Rev. John M. McNamara, D. D., V. G., Auxiliary Bishop of Washington.

Miss Shipman

This graduating class, the largest to date, is the eleventh to complete the courses at the academy. The 62 members are: Joan Allen, Elizabeth Belt, Joan Byrne, Julie Ann Carta, Mary Ann Carta, Carol Connor, Joan DeBald, Yolanda DeMoro, Doris DeNeane, Louise Deto, Mary Duchesne, Ann Dunbar, Elizabeth Ann Estes, Margaret Fanning, Barbara Franke, Joan Gleason, Stephanie Gorman, Gertrude Grimmnitz, Joan Gunther, Anne Herzig, Patricia Hickey, Carla Hill, Lois Hoyle, Joan Hushion, Dolores Hynson, Mary Kennedy, Jeanne Kowaleski, Sally Kunkel, Jane Lynch, Carolyn Maserick, Mary McDuell, Joan McGivern, Margaret McHenry, Elizabeth Mess, Rita Mudd, Irene Muldowney, Jane O'Brien, Ruth O'Brien, Grace Passero, Jean Perry, Marjorie Peter, Annette Puglisi, Helen Reagan, Patricia Richards, Dorothy Rihl, Elizabeth Roy, Edna Salsbury, Nancy Schreiber, Cecilia Shea, Patricia Shipman, Carole Stevenson, Katherine Sweeney, Mary Frances Sweeney, Ann Swenson, Deirdre Tierney, Margaret Tuhy, Betty Waldron, Mary Weadon, Rita Whittemore, Shirley Willis Margaret Woodland, Norma Wootton.

Several of the seniors received awards or recognition for work in various fields. Outstanding for her contribution to the academy in the line of citizenship, Betty Waldron was elected by the student body to merit the Civitan Citizenship Award. Jean Perry was awarded a scholarship to Immaculata Junior College. Sally Kunkel was honored as May Queen.

A local prize of a $25 Government bond and a State prize of a $100 bond were received by Jeanne Kowaleski for winning an essay contest sponsored by Court Forest Glen and the State Court of Maryland of the Catholic Daughters of America.

99th Program At St. John's

By Frank DiGregorio

ST. JOHN'S COLLEGE will bid farewell to its class of '50 at the 99th commencement exercises at Catholic University on June 7.

Wearing the traditional cadet uniform, 94 seniors will receive their diplomas from guest speaker Brother D. Vincent, Ph. D., Professor of Psychology, LaSalle College, Philadelphia.

DiGregorio

The salutatory will be given by Band Captain Eugene Henry, while Cadet Captain Frank Di Gregorio will represent the class as valedictorian.

Besides the awarding of diplomas and presentation of scholastic awards, commissions will be officially conferred on 31 cadet officers.

Of the ninety-four graduates, 75 percent plan to attend college in September. Most of this group have already been accepted. Receiving an appointment to West Point was Cadet Lieut. Barron Fredricks. Another honor student, Gerald Goeringer, was awarded a scholarship to the University of Pennsylvania.

Besides these scholastic honors, numerous athletic scholarships are pending for Bob MacDonald (Princeton), Norman Drake and Gene Matullo (George Washington), and Bob McLindon (Bullis Prep).

With the dinner dance slated for June 3 at Airlie, and the senior prom June 5 at the Terrace Room of Washington Airport, the most popular activities are yet to take place.

The cadets were vigorous during the basketball season, amassing 13 straight victories and finishing the regular season with the Catholic championship and a 21 win, 4 loss record. Further honors were won in the Metropolitan tourney, which saw the Johnnies battle their way to the finals, only to be edged by Tech, 35-32.

In the essay contest sponsored by Washington sales executives, Cadet Lieut. Edward Hickey took second place and $50. Representing S. J. C. at the Civitan Honor Key dinner was Frank Di Gregorio, Civitan Award winner. The student publication, "The Sabre," gained first place in the Columbia Scholastic Press Association.

Under the leadership of Cadet Colonel Paul Merola, the Cadet Corps also had a successful year. Marching in the Army Day parade, the Sesquicentennial celebration, and the Armed Forces Day parade were a few of its activities.

16 at Landon Pick Colleges

By David Granger

THE 16 members of the senior class of the Landon School, Bethesda, will receive their diplomas at the twenty-first commencement on June 9. Dr. Richard Weigle, president of St. John's College, Annapolis, will deliver the address at the graduation exercises, which will be held in the school.

Granger

The program will begin at 4 o'clock with the marching of the student body into the gymnasium and the singing of the national anthem.

Those receiving diplomas are: Landon Banfield, Bethesda; Thomas Barrett, Rochester, N. Y.; Charles Brookes, Washington; Halleck Butts, Bethesda; William Coupland, Washington; Alan Engelsman, New York, N. Y.; Carl Fayen, Leesburg; David Granger, Bethesda; Eberhard Haynes, Washington, Allen Hobbs, Washington; Bernhard Heffman, Washington; John Mudgett, Atlanta; Robert Norris, Washington; John Reed, Washington; Michael Riddiford, Washington; John Stoner, Washington.

In reviewing the year, members of the graduating class can look back upon a year of active participation in extra-curricular activities and sports, as well as a fine record of scholastic achievement.

The senior class at Landon strives to provide leadership in all school activities, and its members hold the key positions of responsibility. Landon begins with the third grade, continuing through the twelfth. Its graduates attend a wide variety of colleges and universities. The school's 250 alumni keep in touch with the school and retain an active interest in its welfare.

All graduates plan to attend colleges next fall.

Experience Counts

Grads Will Find Labor Market Tight

By Fred Z. Hetzel

USES Director for the District of Columbia

YOUNG PEOPLE in the Washington labor market area comprise a high proportion of the total labor force. About 56,000, or 1 worker out of every 12, is 21 years of age or under. Following June commencement, about 15,000 additional high school and college graduates will be searching for employment.

Hetzel

Local employment is now at its highest level and unemployment is negligible. Still the job problem facing the June graduate is difficult. Whether the new job seeker is a college or high school graduate, he will find the job market highly competitive. This is why. Youth is inexperienced, and experienced job applicants are already competing for existing vacancies.

College graduates, without a major in some specific field such as social work, architecture, elementary school teaching etc., will have the same job-finding problems as the less-educated entrants into the labor market.

Job seekers will find their best private employment prospects in the wholesale, retail and service industries. These fields employ nearly 50 percent of all workers in the area. Transportation and communications, construction, finance, insurance and real estate and manufacturing make up the remainder and follow in that order. Government, of course, continues to be Washington's "major industry." Employment in the Federal and District of Columbia government, in most instances, is contingent upon Civil Service "status." Young people, particularly veterans, will have a fair chance to secure Government positions if they can pass the prescribed tests.

The offices of the USES for the District of Columbia have had difficulty recently in locating qualified bricklayers, carpenters, stenographers, secretaries, typists, bookkeeping machine operators, nurses, and electrical engineers. Young people might well consider either further training as apprentices or formal schooling which would qualify them in these occupations.

W.&L. Awards 490 Diplomas

By Nancy Baumgardner

THE 1950 CLASS of Washington-Lee High School had the school's twenty-fifth anniversary as a highlight all year. It offered an excellent theme for Class Night, the annual, and other occasions throughout the year, preceding graduation exercises, when 490 students received diplomas.

Miss Baumgardner

A 15-year-old school tradition in football ended this year when W-L lost for the third consecutive year to George Washington High and permanently lost the "Old Oaken Bucket." The 1949 football team attained a record of four wins, three ties, and three losses. Northern Virginia championships were captured by the baseball team as well as the rowing crew.

A special feature was College Night, when representatives from the colleges most in demand came to the school. Students and their parents were given an opportunity to discuss the advantages and disadvantages of each college represented. Later, there was a Career Day. Students were asked to give their preferences of professions.

On Founders Day, all the students assembled in the stadium.

Perry Organ was honored for being first in the spelling contest at Charlottesville. In the American Legion oratorical contest, Henry Penz won second-place honors in Virginia.

Graduation announcements and personalized cards were ready for the seniors in May. Seniors received invitations to the Junior-Senior Prom which was given in their honor by the Junior Class.

Baccalaurate services will be held Sunday preceding graduation. The next night, students will crowd to the Shoreham Hotel for the long-awaited Senior Prom.

With the girls in the white and the boys in the navy blue caps and gowns, the graduation program will be in the stadium for the first time. Students who are being awarded scholarships will be announced at graduation.

A recent poll of the graduating class showed 53 percent planned to attend college next year.

Charlotte Hall Graduating 22

TWENTY-TWO cadets of Charlotte Hall Military Academy at Charlotte Hall, Maryland, will be graduated June 5.

Valedictorian of the class is Cadet Capt. Donaldson DeVries Frizzell, son of Mr. and Mrs. Roscoe Frizzell of West Friendship, Md. The salutatorian is Cadet Capt. Luis Viteri, Quito, Ecuador, who is the son of Ambassador and Mrs. Homero Viteri.

The graduates will be addressed by Major Gen. Orlando Ward, USA, who is chief of the Historical Division of the Special Staff. Diplomas will be presented to the class by William Carlyle Turner, chairman of the board of trustees.

The weekend program will include Alumni Day and the final ball on Saturday, June 3, and a dress parade, band concert, and baccalaureate service on Sunday, June 4. Awards will be presented at the commencement exercises on Monday at 11 a. m.

Douglass Course

A NEW summer course analyzing the philosophies and idealogies in conflict around the world will be given by Dr. Paul F. Douglass, president of American University, during the summer session. Titled "Historical Evolution of Contemporary Idealogies," it will be conducted at the president's residence, 4500 Massachusetts ave. nw., Monday and Thursday evenings, 6:30 to 8:30, from June 12 to July 29.

Eastern Aids Civic Drives

By Carolyn Cunningham

COOPERATION has been at the core of Eastern's diversified activities in the past year.

The first successful campaign by the faculty, students and the newspaper was a drive in the fall for the installation of traffic lights at 17th and East Capitol sts.

Miss Cunningham

Again in April the departments joined to spark the Southeast renovation program. The art department sponsored a contest for an architectural sketch to redecorate six houses on G st. se. Allan Marsh, second prize winner in the sculpture division of the National Scholastic Art Contest, received a gold watch from the Southeast Businessmen's Association for the best design. Seventeen E Club boys and several members of the art classes painted the houses April 29 in a record of 1 hour and 49 minutes to carry through the design.

Achieving top honors in the scholastic contests in both art and writing, Eastern chalked up two national prizes. In art, Franklin Wright took second place in the pastel division. Ann Taylor Baldwin received first prize for her editorial on the atom bomb.

Scholarships have been granted to six June and February seniors. Midterm Graduates Barbara Perkins and Viola Andolfatto are attending American and George Washington Universities, respectively. Entering Duke on the NROTC program is Heber Osbourne. Bill Dunn will attend Wesleyan and Donald Detwiler and Carolyn Cunningham will represent the June graduates at GW on full tuition scholarships.

Punch and Judy, school yearbook, gained the all-American rating from the National Scholastic Press. The Easterner, school newspaper, was awarded all-American for the seventh consecutive year, the Medalist from Columbia University for the sixth year and an all-Columbian rating for the most outstanding headlines in its national classification.

All-high athletes chosen were: P. A. Dyer (twice), Dom Adriani, Bobby Lynn, Jim O'Donnell and Kenny Atchison. Track Star John Ward will attend 'Penn State on a scholarship.

Sidwell Notes Its 67th Year

By Joanne Gilbert

SIDWELL Friends School will observe its 67th year in graduation exercises June 7 for this school with its Quaker principles.

Fifty-two form the class of 1950. "Commencement" means "this is an end." The class takes pride in the achievement of each of its members.

Miss Gilbert

Scholarships to colleges have already been won by George MacWhorter to Williams, by Alberta Finch to Earlham, by Humphrey Fisher to Deep Springs, by Judy Catlin to Sweet Briar. The school recognized several students last June by giving them awards in their junior year. Ronald McDonald won the Harvard Club Book Award, Eleanor Johnston won the Elmira Key, and Mary King was elected to Cum Laude.

Many of our students have won outside honors. In the local Scholastic Art Contest, gold achievement keys were won by Sally Rosenthal and George Huguely. In the Scholastic Writing Contest, Joanne Gilbert placed second in the area and won a special prize in the national contest for an essay on prejudice. Danielle Luzzatto was best of class in Current Affairs in the area and won fourth place nationally in General Articles. Last year in a citywide essay contest sponsored by the American Medical Association, Nancy Fisher won first prize. Judith Catlin won a gold-plated typewriter in another writing contest.

During the football season this year, Charles Brown was chosen for the "Player of the Week." In track, Sidwell Friends came in second in the Interstate Athletic Conference with Curtis Turnbull running up the highest score of 17½ points.

To the traditional round of activities for graduation week: the senior prom, dinner, and graduation exercises, all of which will be held for the last time at Grayson House, a senior play, "Senior Shackles," with book and lyrics written by members of the class, has been added.

Graduation exercises will be held in the historic boxwood gardens behind Grayson House.

Pages' Class Largest Ever

By Tim McEnroe

ON June 12 at 8 o'clock in the evening, the halls of the House Committee on Ways and Means, accustomed to echoes of the speeches of the members of the House, will resound with the strains of "Pomp and Circumstance" and the marching feet of the largest class ever to graduate from Capitol Page School. These lads will set forth in regal caps and gowns of bright maroon, with a complete high school education.

McEnroe

The main address will be given by Representative Dewey Short of Missouri.

Native sons of Ohio. Pennsylvania, Maryland, North Dakota, Kansas, Utah, Alabama, Georgia, New Mexico, Louisiana and Kentucky will receive their honors here.

While all the boys plan to continue their education in college, not more than two are going to the same school. They graduate as prospective doctors, ministers, army officers and ranchers, but the majority plan to study law.

This final year of high school This final year of high school has been a busy one. As usual, almost all outside activities, except a few parties, are pushed aside in the face of busy months of both work and school, which leave too little time for real play.

The social sun hits its peak June 10, at the Shoreham Hotel for the annual Junior-Senior prom, dance made possible by the mothers of the pages.

The boys not only form the largest graduating class, but the first one to be graduated from the school since quarters were shifted from the cellar of the Capitol to the sunny upper floor of the Library of Congress.

Extra Credits At St. Anthony

By Mary Ellen Lynagh

ON SUNDAY EVENING, June 11, in St. Anthony Church, the Rev. John J. Coady, J. U. D., S. T. D., pastor, will confer diplomas on 48 seniors of St. Anthony High School. In addition to their high school diplomas, 15 seniors who have passed university exams in their major subjects will be awarded Catholic University diplomas.

After the exercise, a dance will be held in the school auditorium.

The weeks preceding graduation will be full of special events.

On May 29, the junior class will give a dinner dance for the seniors in the parish hall. The senior Class Day outing will be held at Chapel Point Beach June 8. A communion breakfast for seniors and parents is scheduled for June 4.

The May Procession May 25 was true to senior tradition. Paula Joy was May Queen with Geraldine Ferrara and Andrea Jose as her attendants. The junior girls formed her court.

Negro Graduate Faces Special Job Obstacles

By James A. Pawley
Industrial Secretary, Washington Urban League

DESPITE the fact that we have the highest level of employment in our industrial history and that some 60 million persons are gainfully employed, this year's college graduate is likely to find that his diploma is no guarantee of a good job—or even a job! As for the youngster just coming out of high school, he should not be too surprised if he finds himself in the ranks of the unemployed.

Pawley

For the average American boy or girl, this situation is vexing enough, but for the Negro youth it is distressing. The Negro boy or girl must contend not only with labor surpluses and more rigid job requirements on the part of employers, but also with restrictive employment practices in many industries and with discriminatory trade union policies.

In the local labor market, for example, the Negro worker is likely to find that while he constitutes about 1 out of every 4 persons in the labor force, he accounts for more than 1 out of every 2 of the unemployed. At the higher skill levels, this disparity grows even wider.

The Negro liberal arts graduate with a major in chemistry, physics, biology, economics, psychology, sociology or mathematics can expect considerably fewer jobs this year than at any other time since the peak employment period in 1945. This situation can hardly be attributed to racial factors alone, however.

Social work graduates will fare considerably better. There is an active national demand for trained social workers, particularly in the Far West and the South. In the District of Columbia, however, while the need for social workers is just as urgent, the uncertainties of both private and public social agencies budget will limit the actual number of placements.

Engineering graduates will find employment opportunities extremely scarce here. This appears to be true not only for Negro graduates but for whites as well. Electrical engineers are likely to be the more difficult to place. The local situation seems to be reflected throughout the country.

Stenography will probably offer the largest number of entry occupational opportunities to this year's graduating classes. This is true for high school as well as college trained persons. The Urban League has experienced considerable difficulty this year in finding qualified applicants for the better than average secretarial and stenographic positions.

Service occupations have traditionally provided Negro workers with the largest number of jobs.

Selling is another area to which the Negro graduate might give attention. The keen and sustained competition for new or expanded markets has done much to knock down many barriers which have restricted the choice of nonwhite workers. There is perhaps no other field in which the Negro worker's chances are more completely dependent upon individual initiative and ability and where there are so few restrictions.

The skilled trades continue to offer a substantial number of entry occupational opportunities in the helper, learner and apprenticeship categories to the Negro job seeker. The building trades offer by far the largest number.

Sacred Heart Closes Year

By Mary Margaret Carr

COMMENCEMENT activities began May 11, when the home economics class feted the seniors with a tea. The following night brought the Junior-Senior Prom at the Kennedy-Warren.

Miss Carr

The seniors formed a Court of Honor for their May Queen, Marie Murphy, at the annual May Procession, Sunday, May 21.

The senior class play, "Cinderella in Loreland," was presented on May 25 and 26 in Sacred Heart Auditorium, with Norah Casey in the title role. Janet Baden played the part of "Ashes," Cinderella's faithful cat; Joan Sass portrayed the stepmother, and her two ambitious daughters were played by Rena Sabatini and Mary Jane Hopping.

The seniors were entertained at tea by the sophomores on May 26. They will be the guests of the freshmen at a picnic in Rock Creek Park on May 29.

Class night June 1 will feature the candle and rose ceremony in which the juniors and seniors make an exchange of the symbolic candle and rose. Margaret Scanlan will give the salutatory address and Mary Margaret Carr will deliver the valedictory.

On Sunday, June 4, the class will be the guests of the faculty at breakfast, after attending mass in cap and gown at Sacred Heart Church.

Graduation exercises are scheduled for the evening of June 6.

Cardozo High Is Tops in Track

By Aloysius F. Jones

IT WAS agreed by the Class of '50 that the outstanding achievement of this school year has been the record made by the track team. Moreover, all the members of the record-breaking mile relay team and of the Championship of America 440-yard relay team are in the June graduating class. Under the guidance of Coach Marc Jenkins, there was a triumphant and undefeated season.

Aloysius Jones

The first victory was won at the National Guard Armory in defeating the Georgetown Frosh in the mile relay. George Carter, Earl Storm, Joseph Walker, and Aloysius Jones composed this winning team. Next came the Philadelphia Inquirer meet, when this same team set a new mark in the mile relay.

The third victory was scored in New York City at Madison Square Garden. Here the six-lap relay team broke the world's record set by Cardozo in 1948, covering the distance in 1.42:03. At this same meet, Henry (Cubby) Johnson became the 50-yard high hurdle champ by covering the distance in six and six-tenths seconds. Alphonsus Jones won the mile run.

To conclude the victorious indoor season, Cardozo went to Camden, N. J., and won the team trophy by scoring the highest number of points. The mile relay team, composed this time of George Carter, Thomas Kendrick, Joseph Walker, and A. F. Jones, finished first.

The outdoor season opened for us at Seaton Hall, where we had a rough time of it, winning first place in the 440-yard relay trials and second place in the 880. Cardozo won second and third places behind Boys' High of New York City in the finals.

Later on, at Bridgeton High, the team won the mile relay (making a new record), placed first in the medley relay and second in the 880-yard relay, and won a trophy for the team making the highest number of points. Participating in this meet, in addition to those already named, were Thomas Kendrick and Ronald Carpenter.

The climax came at the Penn Relays. There, we won the championship of America in the 440-yard-relay over Boys' High of New York City. The time was 43 seconds. For this we were awarded gold wrist watches and a trophy. Cardozo also placed third in the Championship of America Mile Relay.

Cardozo finished the season by winning the city championship in Washington and also at the C.I.A.A. meet in Baltimore.

Leon Reid and Jeannette McDaniel were honor student graduates at Cardozo High School's mid-year commencement

Sasscer Has Initial Class

By Elsie Entzian

THE 1950 graduating class feels it is particularly honored this year, being first to graduate in the new Frederick High School, completed only last year and occupied in April. We also are the first among the classes to graduate in the 12-year system recently put into effect in Prince Georges County.

Miss Entzian

The last month of the school year is a culmination of senior activities. The senior play, given on May 19, was "strictly formal," a three-act comedy which told of the overemphasized activities of the teen-ager. The first week of June is ushered in with the junior-senior banquet, a formal dinner-dance given to the seniors by the junior class. The senior prom takes place on June 9, the highlight of the student's life in high school. The final ceremony is the long-awaited graduation exercise, held on June 13.

Among the honors awarded is the school letter, acquired after the student has collected 100 points. The point system determines the awards by the number of extracurricular activities the student engages in. Bessie May Wyvill and Donald DeVaughn of the senior class have already received the Citizenship Award given by the Kiwanis Club.

The senior class edited the 1950 Elm, the school annual. The adviser, Miss Katheryn Sigrest, worked with the editor, Elsie Entzian, and other members of the staff.

A small percent of the graduating students plan to go to college; the others have some particular vocation which they plan to enter immediately upon leaving high school. Occupational choices range from farmer and artist to physicist and butcher. Most of the girls plan on stenographic careers.

Thirty-five students will receive diplomas this year, an unusually small class. They will be dressed in caps and gowns in the school colors, blue and white.

Montgomery To Honor 77

By Laurence Dahlin

BOASTING one of the largest graduating classes in the history of the school, Richard Montgomery High School of Rockville will hold graduation exercises June 19, at the Rockville gymnasium. Seventy-seven seniors will receive their diplomas.

Lahlin

This year's senior class, advised by Mrc. Margaret Miles, has clung to and broken some of the traditions of the past. The traditional Christmas dance was the highlight of the holiday season.

This year's seniors kept the tradition of a May Day festival but changed the manner in which it was presented. Instead of having a May Day orchestra dance they had a celebration on the school athletic field.

The senior banquet was held in the school's cafeteria this year. The seniors felt that much of the fun is lost when they have all the work done for them. The seniors decorated the cafeteria and selected the menu.

Highlighting the year's activities was the Junior-Senior Prom. As in years of the past, the prom was held at the nearby Manor Club.

Richard Montgomery students are proud of their yearbook. This year, the "Rocket" came out in the first week of May. Tradition was broken when the seniors' pictures appeared in caps and gowns.

Baclaureate services were held in the Baptist Church, Sunday evening, May 21. The pastor of this church plus the town's ministers led the services. The seniors sang an appropriate anthem.

This year's graduating class will dress in caps and gowns. The boys will wear blue gowns and the girls, white. Approximately half of the members of the class are planning to attend college or business school.

Journalism Institute To Be Held at C. U.

Dr. Regis Boyle, journalism adviser at Eastern High School, will direct a summer institute in journalism for high school students June 19 to July 14 at Catholic University. Students will publish "The Pioneer," a tabloid campus newspaper.

St. Patrick's Teams Champ

By Mary Ann O'Brien

THE year was a successful one for the girls of St. Patrick's Academy, especially in athletics. Both the junior and senior varsities had C. Y. O. high school basketball championship teams, neither team tasting defeat in league competition.

Mary A. O'Brien

To honor the victory, a "Sports night" was arranged. An elected "sports queen," Claudia Culbreth, and her senior court—Mary Ellen Ponton, Joan Salkeld, Jean Dusterhoff, Phyllis Golab and Mary Ann O'Brien—reigned during the exhibition. Pins, letters and silver basketballs were presented to our "champs."

In April, a musical revue, "Lyric Portraits," was presented by our Glee Club.

The Spring Prom was a gala affair in the school auditorium.

In May, the whole student body honored Mary by marching in procession to St. Patrick's Church, where a crown of flowers was placed on a statue of the Blessed Mother by Mary Ann Dowd, the senior who was chosen May Queen.

Since St. Patrick's is primarily a business school, most of our 42 seniors have jobs awaiting them after graduation.

On the Sunday preceding graduation, our baccalaureate mass will be celebrated in St. Patrick's Church. Graduation exercises will be held June 8 in the school auditorium. Mary Gallegari and Patricia Kerwin are valedictorian and salutatorian, respectively.

MORE than ever before, it is important to plan your future. Today, the person who is properly trained in a field that is best suited to his abilities, is the person most likely to succeed in the future. Painting and paperhanging are skilled trades which provide fine possibilities for the man who is well trained. Our expanding population, with its increasing housing requirements, makes the need for painters and paperhangers quite apparent.

The National Institute of Painting and Paperhanging is one of the finest schools of its kind in the country, where you can be properly trained for the painting and paperhanging trades. Our course of study consists of 1250 hours of painting and paperhanging in a period of one year, and is based on the knowledge that you learn best by doing. Therefore, the majority of your time is devoted to performing the work of these trades. The curriculum covers interior and exterior painting, wall priming and flatting, graining, staining, finishing of woods, color mixing and blending; trimming, cutting and hanging paper; and decorative planning. We have an exceptionally fine staff, headed by Melvin Wayne Taylor, formerly head of the Department of Painting and Paperhanging at the Hampton Institute, Hampton, Va.

If you are a veteran you can be approved for this course. At this time we are accepting applications for morning, afternoon and night classes, with some classes starting immediately. Fill out this coupon, call, or drop in to visit us and you will see for yourself why we think the National Institute of Painting and Paperhanging is one of the best equipped and excellently staffed schools of its kind.

Learn Advertising—Then Climb!

By James Rotto
Sales Director, Hecht Co.

IF YOU dislike routine, there may be a career for you in advertising—provided you are eager and willing to spend two or three years apprenticeship at a moderate salary.

ROTTO

As a newspaper reporter must do time as a copyboy and a "cub" before getting a regular assignment, so must the embryo advertising man or woman start at the bottom rung, chasing proofs and transcribing corrections while observing the mechanics and know-how of this fascinating business.

Advertising today is produced by specialists. This gives young people a break if their talents lean in the direction of illustration, copywriting, photography, or typography.

If you have an ambition to excel in any of these fields, your battle is half won, but don't expect to walk out of school into a job where you will be producing complete advertisements right away.

Getting a Foothold

SPACE in newspapers and time of the air are expensive commodities. The professional, through study and trial and error, discovers how the printed or spoken message can sell the huge quantities of merchandise that our factories produce, and the vital knowledge can only be absorbed by working shoulder to shoulder with veteran advertisers who know the rules by heart.

All the top people in advertising have gotten there by first getting a foothold in some advertising department as a messenger, clerical or filing clerk. and in due course found out the branch of advertising they are best suited for. There are no short cuts.

Carroll to Talk at Visitation

By Katherine Ellen Elson

THE strains of Elgar's Pomp and Circumstance will resound through Georgetown Visitation Convent on June 7. The 47 members of the graduating class will promenade to the stage and there receive diplomas and awards individually. The Rev. Gerard F. Yates, S.J., dean of the Graduate School of Georgetown University, will preside, assisted by the Rev. James T. Wilkinson, S.J., and Representative John A. Carroll of Colorado, father of one of the graduates, will address the assembly.

The march will be played by Mary Anne Johnson of the class, Peggy Ann Mahorner and Lenora Toland of the junior class, and Angela Dondero of the sophomore class. A duet will be sung by Mittie Magruder Forbes and Mary Frances Tastet, senior.

Among the honors to be presented are a full tuition scholarship to Georgetown Visitation Junior College for Mary Sheila Malloy, a tuition scholarship to Rosemont College to Joan Ellen MacIntyre, and a tuition scholarship to Marywood College for Barbara Claire Mersch.

Gold medal for excellence in scholarship for four years will be awarded Dorothy Holly Reynolds; gold medal for debating to Katharine Ellen Elson.

The year was highlighted by the election of Elizabeth Tisinger, Joan Ellen MacIntyre, Joan Scott Paroni, Barbara Claire Mersch and Ann Rogers Owings to the Washington all-star girls' hockey teams.

RooseveltHigh Sets June 13th

By Robert McColley

THEODORE ROOSEVELT High School will hold its fourteenth outdoor graduation ceremony in the stadium at 6 p. m. Tuesday, June 13, weather permitting. White caps and gowns will be worn by the girls, blue by the boys.

McColley

The 172 seniors look back on 1949-50 as a good year—the sixtieth in the history of Business-Roosevelt.

Girl cadets won the crack platoon competition for the fourth time, adding another trophy to their collection. Col. Tom Farley was top officer of the Washington High School Cadet Corps.

Musically, Roosevelt students have been active and successful this year. The traditional spring operetta was a lively and polished production of "Pinafore," which large audiences found enjoyable. Arnold Sperling and Dooley Stephanos were outstanding stars. Two seniors, James Geralis and Allan Milofsky, were finalists in the Hamilton Bank music competition, Allan won the trophy for second place among the vocalists.

The art department has garnered high honors. Larry Reyman, Betty Hyman, Janice Harsh, Anton Levandowsky and many others did superior work and won various awards.

Wearing gold keys won as scholastic writing awards are Anton Levandowsky, Bob McColley, Matina Kokonis, Owen Raynor, Mitchell Blankstein and Barbara Hines.

Scholarship winners announced to date are Carolyn Kistler and Thomas Farley, George Washington; Robert Rosson, Wesleyan; Shirley Ward, University of Virginia (Westhampton College).

Plans include a class supper, replete with chicken, talent and entertainment; a boatride down the Potomac and a precedent-shattering prom June 12 at the Airport Terrace. Heretofore the senior prom has been held in the school building.

Class officers are Simon Atlas, president; Robert Rosson, vice president; Shirley Ward, secretary, and Margaret Sanford, treasurer.

The last days before graduation are the gayest of the long school year. Senior members of the Mount Vernon Seminary Student Council hold an out-of-door meeting before their graduation, June 5. Mt. Vernon Graduates 42

By June Pearson

AS THE school term draws to a close in graduation ceremonies June 9, Mount Vernon seniors may take pride in their school year

Miss Pearson

During the 1949-50 term, Mount Vernon high school enjoyed a successful athletic record. The Mount Vernon Majors football team emerged victorious in four of 10 games, losing five, and tying one. In basketball, the Majors won ten and lost ten. Thus far in the baseball season, the Majors have won thirteen and have lost only four. All three teams won the Fairfax County Championship.

The newly organized band of Mount Vernon has been very successful. The band has participated in concerts and has entertained at the P. T. A. meetings.

The Seniors conclude their high school life in a flurry of excitment. June 2, the Seniors will journey to Beverly Beach for Class Day, and June 7, the Junior-Senior Prom will take place in the Terrace Room of the National Airport.

The Baccalaureate Service will take place in historic Pohick Church June 4.

The Reed Theater in Alexandria, Virginia will be the scene of the indoor graduation June 9. Forty-two Seniors will be graduated. They will wear gray caps and gowns over light dresses and dark suits.

Three Seniors will receive scholarships. These are: Robert Masters, who will receive an N. R. O. T.C scholarship to the University of Idaho; June Pearson, who will be awarded a nursing scholarship to St. Luke's Hospital in Richmond, and Ilse-Smakula, who will receive a scholarship to Syracuse University, Syracuse, New York. June Pearson will receive a Good Citizenship award, given by the D. A. R.

Two D. C. Seniors Finishing Hollins

MISS CATHERINE Lee DuBois, 2139 Wyoming ave., and Miss True Nash, daughter of Col. and Mrs. John Nash, 1908 Florida ave., are among 55 candidates for the degree of Bachelor of Arts at Hollins College June 5, the college's 108th commencement.

Miss DuBois recently reigned as May Queen at the College May Day and this year has served as vice president of her class. Miss Nash, an active member of the International Relations Club in which she has served as secretary, treasurer and program chairman, is a member of Freya, honorary secret society.

Laurel High Marks Firsts

By Miriam Jenkins

MANY FIRSTS were chalked up by the 1950 senior class at Laurel High School, which will be graduated June 14 in ceremonies at 8 p.m. in the gymnasium.

Miriam Jenkins

Among these firsts are the presentation of a Gilbert and Sullivan operetta, "H. M. S. Pinafore;" being hosts to 378 exhibitors at the Second Annual Prince Georges County Science Fair; staging a May Music Festival for Greenbelt, Mount Rainier, and Laurel schools; and welcoming the Prince Georges County high-school football program.

The year has been highlighted with plays, dances, athletic banquets, and a variety of music and radio programs. Outstanding events include the annual prom given by the juniors for the senior class, the certificate of first place award won by the school paper, "The Tatler," at the Maryland Scholastic Press Conference, and the Prince Georges Championship Athletic Trophy awarded the girls' basketball team for the third year in succession.

Commencement week activities will begin with the Baccalaureate Service at St. Philip's Episcopal Church June 11

June 13, the Class Night program will be presented by members of the class for their parents and friends, followed by dancing.

A processional of 57 seniors, robed in blue and white caps and gowns, will walk under the traditional arch of flags in the Laurel High School gymnasium on the night of June 14.

The theme of the graduation ceremonies will be "Builders of Tomorrow." Five members of graduating class will present brief addresses on this subject.

The program of graduation week will culminate in the alumni banquet and dance June 15.

66 to Graduate At St. Cecilia

By Katherine Gebhard

MARKING the final ceremony of their high school years at St. Cecilia's Academy, the commencement exercises will be held on June 5 for the Class of 1950. Sixty-six graduates, robed in white cap and gown, will receive their diplomas the eighty-first graduation since St. Cecilia's was founded. The ceremony will take place in the school auditorium.

Miss Gebhard

The Rev. Nell Gargan, S. J., will be the speaker. The valedictory will be delivered by Katharine Gebhard, while the salutatory address will be given by Joan Monaghan.

The baccalaureate mass will be celebrated on the Sunday morning preceding the commencement, June 4, at St. Peter's Church at 10 a. m.

On Senior Day, May 29, the whole school will join in entertaining the seniors. The sophomores will treat the seniors to lunch at a school picnic in Rock Creek Park.

Five members of the Senior class have been accepted into the Quill and Scroll, international honorary society for high school journalists: Jean Maia, Joanne Vermillion, Jeanne Moore, Harriet Edmunds and Katharine Gebhard.

The annual May procession in honor of the Blessed Mother was held on the evening of May 17. Joan Monaghan and Margaret McGrain were attendants to the May Queen, Grace Dungan.

Vocal tribute was paid to Mary by the seniors and the Glee Club on Madonna Evening, May 7.

New members were inducted into the Moreau Chapter of the National Honor Society on May 4. Those who are elected to the society must be outstanding in leadership, character, service and scholarship. Seniors who became members are: Betty Goldsworthy, Kathleen Doucet, Harriet Edmunds, and Jeanne Moore. Character members were Jean Malia, Maureen O'Brien, Aurelia Zerega and Katharine Gebhard.

A Look Back, A Look Ahead

By Ann Tillery
Mount Vernon Seminary

I FEEL lost standing among the other graduates in their crisp white dresses. I hold back the tears as I think of next year, when most of our class will be in college. Will I ever see them again? I shut my eyes and the year flashes before me as the wind turning pages in a book.

Miss Tillery

Founder's Day, Class Night, Baccalaureate and, yes, today, Graduation. I remember the tennis matches, the basketball games, the hockey field and the softball diamond. The cheers of the girls urging their team on ring clearly in my ears. Chapel service, the green, gently rolling hills of our campus in the spring, the anticipation of the Senior Prom and the fun preparing for Class Night, these are moments that I shall never forget.

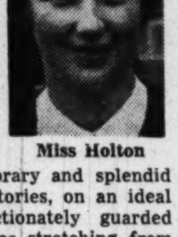
You see, Mount Vernon means very much to me. When I leave, I shall leave behind me some of the happiest moments of my youth. With the laughter, tears have been shed, and with the fun, disappointment has been keen. Through it all, a deep and loyal root has planted itself in my heart.

I know that many young people graduating this year feel about their schools as I feel about Mount Vernon Seminary, a sadness and yet a tingle of excitement. What will the next few years bring to us? Wherever I am, whatever I may be doing, I shall never forget Mount Vernon. You see, Mount Vernon Seminary is a home as well as a school. That is what makes it a great institution.

Congeniality Rules St. Agnes

By Mimi Holton

WHEN I arrived at St. Agnes four years ago, instead of the barred windows, barbed wire fences, and Doberman-pinscher-patrolled halls that I had imagined boarding school would offer, I was amazed to find a charming old residence and every possible modern means of educational equipment. This included a beautiful library and splendid science laboratories, on an ideal campus, affectionately guarded by stately trees stretching from the hockey field, past the outdoor tennis and basketball courts, down to a wide expanse of lawn.



Miss Holton

The entire student body, composed of the boarding department and a large day school, is made up of girls from as far north as Rhode Island, New York, and Pennsylvania, through West Virginia, Maryland, and Virginia reaching as far south as North Carolina and Georgia, and as far west as Missouri, including several international students, too.

The excitement of numerous spring activities on the St. Agnes campus is heralded by the bursting into bloom of our forsythia, dogwood, and other flowering shrubs. With these come examination butterflies and the lump in the throat of every senior. These grow and develop steadily through the last week of school, from the traditional Junior-Senior banquet through Class Day, Baccalaureate Sunday, to Commencement, and gradually reaches a climax in a deluge of tears and unhappy grimaces. These change almost beyond recognition the faces of the girls who are to be the future freshmen at Wellesley, Wheaton, Smith, Vassar, Cornell, Oklahoma, and Stanford Universities, Sweet Briar, Hood, Hollins, and Duke.

AT 72, HE'S STILL GREAT!

At 72, many a scholar who has labored long and hard in the vineyard of science is content to leave the harvest to younger men. But in a tidy frame house on a tree-shaded street in Princeton, N.J., Dr. Albert Einstein (above) this week is quietly contemplating an achievement which may bring him even greater renown. The man who in 1904 excited the world with the concept of relativity, believes that he may yet be able to demonstrate that all forms of nature–stars, electricity, light, possibly even particles of the atom–are subject to the same laws. Today, Albert Einstein is still in the vineyard!

in thrills and thrift with two great Valve-in-Head Engines

The Styleline De Luxe 4-Door Sedan and the Fleetline De Luxe 2-Door Sedan

When you buy your new car, make certain it combines all these new and finer advantages that make motoring worth-while—and offers them at lowest cost! One "must" is the fleet, powerful, efficient performance of a Valve-in-Head engine—the engine that's setting the trend for the industry—the engine that's available at lowest prices only in Chevrolet! And remember—Chevrolet offers you your choice of two great Valve-in-Head Engines . . . both outstanding performers, both amazingly economical . . . and each having its own special type of drive for the finest over-all operating results.* This extra-thrilling, extra-thrifty Valve-in-Head engine performance is but one reason why Chevrolet is the ideal car for you and your family.

CHEVROLET

. . and Finest

in driving and riding ease with economy

Another advantage you'll surely want in your new car is maximum driving and riding ease. Here, too, you'll find Chevrolet excels. It's the only car offering the sensational new Powerglide automatic transmission, teamed with Chevrolet's 105-h.p. Valve-in-Head Engine, for finest no-shift driving at lowest cost* . . . and a highly improved, more powerful standard Valve-in-Head engine, teamed with the famous silent Synchro-Mesh transmission, for finest standard driving at lowest cost—just as you prefer to have it! And, of course, you can count on Chevrolet to give you an extremely high degree of riding-comfort over all roads; for it's also the only low-priced car offering the velvet-smooth Unitized Knee-Action Ride, with airplane type shock absorbers.

CHEVROLET

at Lowest Cost!

so luxurious yet lowest-priced line in its field

Think of all the other features you have come to regard as essentials of truly fine motoring: Body by Fisher for the fullest measure of beauty and luxury! Center-Point Steering for easier, surer control! Curved Windshield with Panoramic Visibility, Fisher Unisteel Construction and Proved Certi-Safe Hydraulic Brakes for the maximum safety-protection! You'll find all these and many other advantages in Chevrolet, just as you'll find them in America's costliest cars, and just as you'll find that they're exclusive to Chevrolet in its price range. Come in! Let us show you these brilliant new Chevrolets! And let us prove to you that they give more value—that they are, indeed, first and finest at lowest cost!

The Place I Like Best

For Jesse Stuart it's the Kentucky hills

Jesse Stuart has been telling about the Kentucky mountains ever since he started writing, 12 novels and 15 years ago. He's still in love with them in his current "Hie to the Hunters" (Whittlesey House). Here he tells you why.

By JESSE STUART

THE MOST BEAUTIFUL PLACE in the world to me is W-Hollow and the Plum Grove Hills in Kentucky.

I've seen attractive places in every country I have visited and in all the states of the U. S. A., but my heart always flies back to W-Hollow.

Why? Probably because I was born in a one-room log cabin on the ridge that divides W-Hollow from the Plum Grove Hills. I live only a mile from that cabin now. As long as I can remember, I have roamed over the Plum Grove Hills and up and down W-Hollow. I have hunted over every slope of every hill. I have followed every stream from its beginning to its end. I have known these hills in spring when they are clouds of wind-ruffled green. I have known them when the leaves were wilted by the hot suns of summer. And in autumn I certainly have never seen anything more beautiful than the golden Plum Grove Hills.

W-Hollow and the Plum Grove Hills—to me the names are affectionate, not strange or comic—is the place where I have grown from boyhood to manhood. It is the place where I have lived and rejoiced and shouted to the wind. Since this particular spot has grown most of the foods that fed me until I was a man, since it gave me clean wind to breathe and beauty to see and fields and hills to hunt over, it is all part of me and I am part of it. It has given me life and strength and beauty and it will hold me in the end. This is my mother earth and I shall die where I have lived, where my heart is and has ever been.

Traveling with his circus from Dutch town to Dutch town, he makes a beeline for the local tax office in each, and stages a one-man protest. Pulling his pockets inside out and standing upside down, he complains loudly that the government has stripped him of every guilder.

As a Dutchman, he has even more to complain about than Americans. A bachelor with an income of 10,000 guilders (about $2,600) pays 35% tax. A married man with two children pays 20%.

In addition, there are taxes on rent, food, property, savings! Ray can't win.

Phony Zoos : a

The AAA warns vacation travelers

BY EMILE C. SCHURMACHER

Large bear and other wild animals attract tourists at honest roadside zoo.

IF YOU ARE TOURING BY CAR this summer and are enticed by signs saying "Free Zoo Ahead–Welcome," the watchword is: enter with your eyes wide open and a firm grip on your pocketbook. Depending on where you are, you may be in a blind for a dishonest gambling joint.

There are well-run, honest, free roadside zoos. But there are also crooked, vicious ones–enough to have caused the American Automobile Association (AAA) and responsible officials to issue warnings to motorists: guard against them if you value your vacation travel funds.

There is nothing wrong with the idea of visiting a genuine roadside zoo – but beware of the zoo, or other roadside establishment, with a gambling hut attached.

Heading for Florida on a busy road, a Michigan couple and their small daughter started passing crude signs inviting them to stop and see the animals.

At his daughter's plea the father stopped the car at one "zoo." Walking light-heartedly through an opening in a rough pine fence, the family met a picturesque old party who glanced shrewdly at their Michigan plates, joked about the animals, and offered to show them around. Mother and daughter were steered to cages holding a "Mountain Canary" (a donkey), a box of dusty snakes, and "The World's Oldest Bear.

The Driver Enters the Board Shack

THEN CAME THE GIMMICK. The father was taken aside and steered with knowing winks to a board shack decorated with palmetto fronds and Indian blankets. Inside, a few other "tourists" were betting on a shell game run by a sleepy Indian. The bettors always won. The father decided to take a chance.

An hour later, the Michigan car crawled slowly down the road. The husband's face was a mask of despair. He had yet to confess that he had been adroitly separated from $625–the nest egg he had saved to take his daughter to Florida's smoke-free air to cure a sinus infection.

Needless to say, the other "tourists" were partners or employees of the zoo keeper, part of a multi-million dollar racket that has mulcted unwary motorists in tourist-attracting states, notably Georgia, Alabama, Illinois, North and South Carolina, Louisiana, Texas, Arizona, New Mexico, and California. In Florida, dishonest zoo operations became so notorious that Gov. Fuller Warren ordered a statewide investigation and cracked down.

Who is working the racket and why isn't it stopped in other states? Recently this writer and a companion made an extensive automobile trip through several states to get the facts. We talked with sheriffs and other law enforcement officers, with local newspapermen, and officials of the AAA.

We talked with swindled motorists and with animal suppliers. Posing as an unsuspecting tourist, the writer on several occasions let himself be swindled out of small sums.

This is what we discovered. There are at least 20 mobs working the free zoo racket. Each mob has as many as ten, and in no instance fewer

OTHER CAUTIONS FOR SUMMER TOURISTS:

1. Always add up your own check in roadside restaurants.
2. Don't pick up hitchhikers when traveling strange roads.
3. If in trouble, be wary of unasked towing service. Demand to know the price first.
4. Report abuses to AAA.
5. If you have insurance, carry card or other proof with you. This may save you trouble in event of an accident.

against a new and growing roadside racket than six men. Some are old-time bootleggers, some confidence men. Some come from small-time "carnies" (carnivals). Others are out-and-out mobsters. Some of our informants said they have been threatened with bodily harm—even death—if they divulged the names of members.

Here is how they operate: First they pick a site on a well-traveled highway. It may be next to a filling station, a fruit-juice stand, a drive-in, or other legitimate tourist establishments. The racketeers tell the owner they can increase his business if he allows them to erect a free zoo. Instead of charging admission, they will merely solicit a small fee from visitors "for the care of the animals."

A crude enclosure is put up, and the mob moves in with several sorry-looking animals and reptiles in cages on trucks or trailers. In a far corner a tent is pitched or a hut is erected. The interior is small, on purpose. The victim does not know that the four or five men who crowd in with him are members of the mob—not fellow tourists. They are there for a twofold reason: (1) to egg the victim on, and (2) to crowd out the victim's wife and keep her outside.

The sucker is lured to bet a quarter on "an old Indian game"—anything from the ancient shell game ("Guess which shell covers the pea") to rolling numbered blocks down a washboard. The sucker wins, then loses. If he gets cautious before he goes broke, a "tourist" who works with the mob offers to play in partnership with him. In one way or another, suckers are taken—for an average of $2,000 a day!

Letters on file at the AAA in Washington, D. C., and at local AAA clubs that have been fighting the racket reveal that scores of motorists have been victimized. All the letters tell substantially the same story.

Here is What One Victim Wrote

THIS ONE IS TYPICAL. So that the victim may not be embarrassed, his own and his brother's names are omitted. The letter is verbatim. The date is February 22, 1950.

> "I wish to report an incident which happened to my brother. Outside of Brunswick, Ga., he stopped at a place which a sign read, See the Snakes Free. Stopping to rest and having some refreshment in the place, the owner induced him to play some kind of game like Roulette, different colored balls spinning round and dropping in a slot. They gave him odds of $50 to $10 and $100 to $10.
> He being a World War Veteran and tired from traveling [they] hooked him for $850 before he knew what they were doing.
>
> No doubt the outfit was electrically controlled and the suckers are stuck. When he left there, a car followed him out of town.
> This sort of racket is highway robbery and should be controlled. . . . The Law should jump them quick . . ."

Why doesn't the Law "jump them quick"? Principally because in many cases the mob fixes the local peace officers. Sheriff Julian Peacock, of Bibb County, Ga., an honest and efficient officer, was offered $500 a week recently by a member of a mob to let a phony zoo operate.

The fixer told the sheriff he would guarantee that the mob would work out-of-state tourists only and not fleece local citizens. Sheriff Peacock grimly refused the money. Some other sheriffs and police officials are not so honest. In such cases, as the writer discovered, the victim who complains to police is told: "So you say this fellow took you for several hundred dollars, do you? Well, suppose we go right on back to that free zoo and ask some questions. If I find that fellow has been gambling, I'll lock him right up. Of course, I'll have to lock you up too. It takes two to gamble, you know."

That usually silences the victim. If too many complaints occur, the peace officer who is taking a cut quietly passes the word to the mob to move on. They can do it at an hour's notice, leaving the cheap enclosure behind and hauling their animals to a new location.

One Mayor Got Fighting Mad

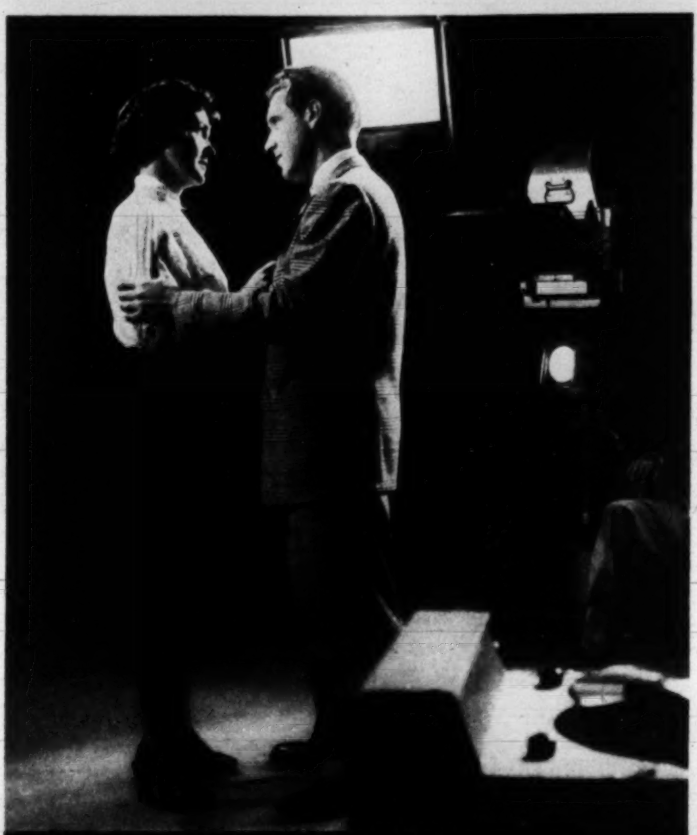
WHEN 10 tourists in two weeks complained they were swindled along Highway #41 near High Springs, Fla., Mayor G. W. McCall got fighting mad. The free zoos merely moved farther from town. When McCall carried his fight up to Governor Warren, they moved out of the state.

As in the case of the other leading "soak-the-stranger" menaces to motorists—hidden speed traps and piratical service stations—the dishonest free zoo cannot be driven out without honest local officials, national indignation, and the cooperation of motorists themselves.

As in the case of motorists shaken down by dishonest traffic courts, few free zoo victims can stay around long enough to fight.

As in the case of criminal hitchhikers, the dishonest free zoos are making things hard for honest ones. The AAA advice is the same in both cases: Be careful. Report all violations. Don't be a sucker!

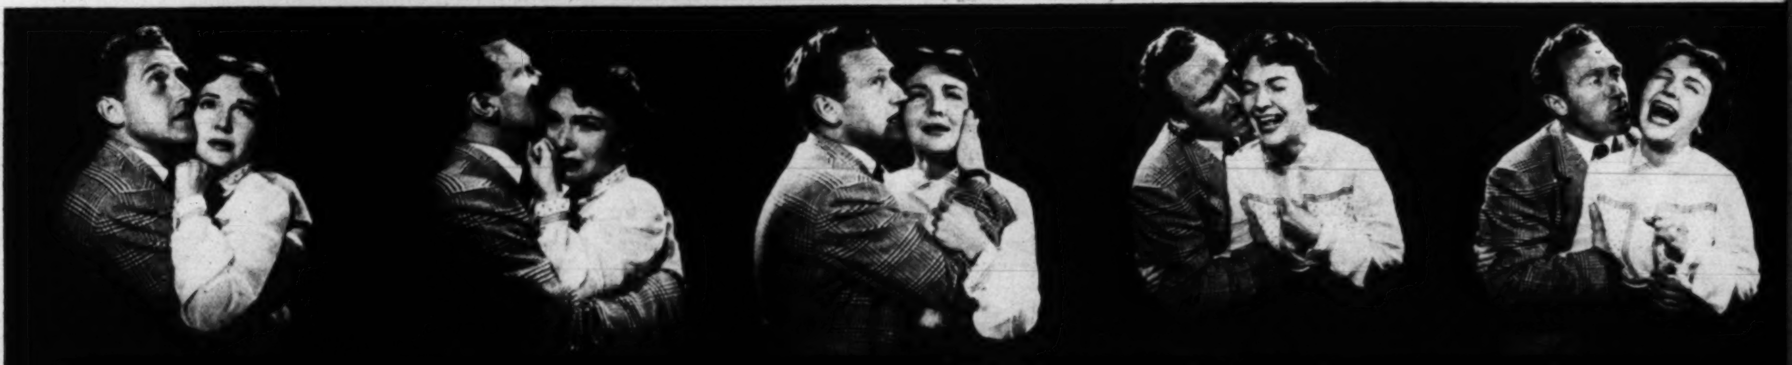
Signs such as these invite vacation tourists to stop at roadside zoos.



Quiet pause sometimes helps actors summon emotions.

Here's how to Cry!

Hollywood stars have their own ways of bringing tears when they need 'em



In "The Next Voice You Hear," a storm upsets Nancy and Whitmore . . . fear grips Nancy, starts her sobbing . . . Whitmore comforts her, but she screams.

By KAY SULLIVAN and SID ROSS

MOST OF THOSE TEARS you see on the screen are the real thing!

Rarely, today, are they caused by onions, or smoke, or ammonia.

Instead, they're usually the product of real emotion. With few exceptions, onion tears and tobacco smoke tears went out with the director's megaphone.

The pictures on these pages, taken by a PARADE photographer in Hollywood, show Nancy Davis rehearsing her crying scene for MGM's forthcoming film The Next Voice You Hear. Miss Davis was really crying – her tears were so real that the impressed photographer reported he was "in a cold perspiration" after shooting the scene.

Each fine actress has her own formula for producing tears. How did Miss Davis do it?

"Just by thinking about what the scene means," she said.

"If I can build myself up to an emotional peak over any scene I play, then I cry. I always try to live the part, and if the scene 'rings a bell' inside, it's no effort for me to cry. That's what happened here. When I got to thinking what it would mean really to hear the voice of God, as I do in the film, it simply overwhelmed me."

James Whitmore, who shares the scene, has another way of summoning tears.

"When I was a kid, my ball team left me at home when they took off to play an inter-city game. That memory alone still makes it possible for me to weep whenever my parts call for it."

Only on rare occasions today do you ever see or hear of ammonia capsules being opened to make the eyes water. Sometimes a collyrium eyewash may be dashed on the lids.

Marlene Dietrich, Lana Turner and Lizabeth Scott all can cry to sad music. Deborah Kerr weeps when Sousa's marches are played. "They bring back memories of the war," she says.

Maureen O'Hara thinks of her family in Ireland and cries from homesickness. Anne Baxter clips tragic news items from the daily papers.

Jane Powell and Mona Freeman both recall the times when their pet puppies were run over. Irene Dunne thinks back to the tragic day when a favorite Christmas doll was burned up.

Judy Garland likes to sing a torch song to herself to bring on a weepy feeling.

Joan Fontaine says it's no trick at all. "I'm a ham," she says. "I can turn on the tears when I'm feeling just fine and dandy." It's simple, too, to Bette Davis. "Why, I just pucker up and cry," she says. Ava Gardner learned to cry as a kid "whenever I wanted anything." She can still bring tears at will.

Crawford's Eyes Run Dry

"If the scene calls for tears," says Joan Crawford, "they come. Of course, when there's take after take, I can't weep any more. Then I call on the studio's 'tear experts' until I can replenish my supply."

The men in films sometimes have to be mournful, too. Paul Kelly says he just makes himself feel sad, and soon the tears come.

This, then, is how actors cry. But how do directors make the audience cry?

Director George Seaton says if he wants the movie-goers to shed tears he won't allow the actors to do so! "It's far more effective," he says, "for the actor to get just to the verge of tears."

Photographs By BEN & SID ROSS

Shaken and racked with weeping, Nancy resists Whitmore's efforts to quiet her. At rehearsal, she kept on crying after strenuous scene was completed.

TRICKY SKISHER Sammy Skogatod, casting at the Venetian Pool in Coral Gables, lies on back and expertly splashes plug in target ring.

HOW TO 'THUMB' REEL is explained to a pig-tailed beginner by Carl Asbury, a grizzled skish veteran of nine.

Skishing!

Target-casting sport keeps everybody happy—especially the fish . . .

THE ONLY ANGLER who never worries about the big one that got away is the fellow who goes skishing instead of fishing.

Skish is target casting for high scores. It was invented by a Scotsman 50 years ago and introduced in this country in the mid-thirties. Instead of casting to catch a fish you try to cast a hookless lure or "plug" into a floating ring. Today there are about 3,000 skish clubs in America.

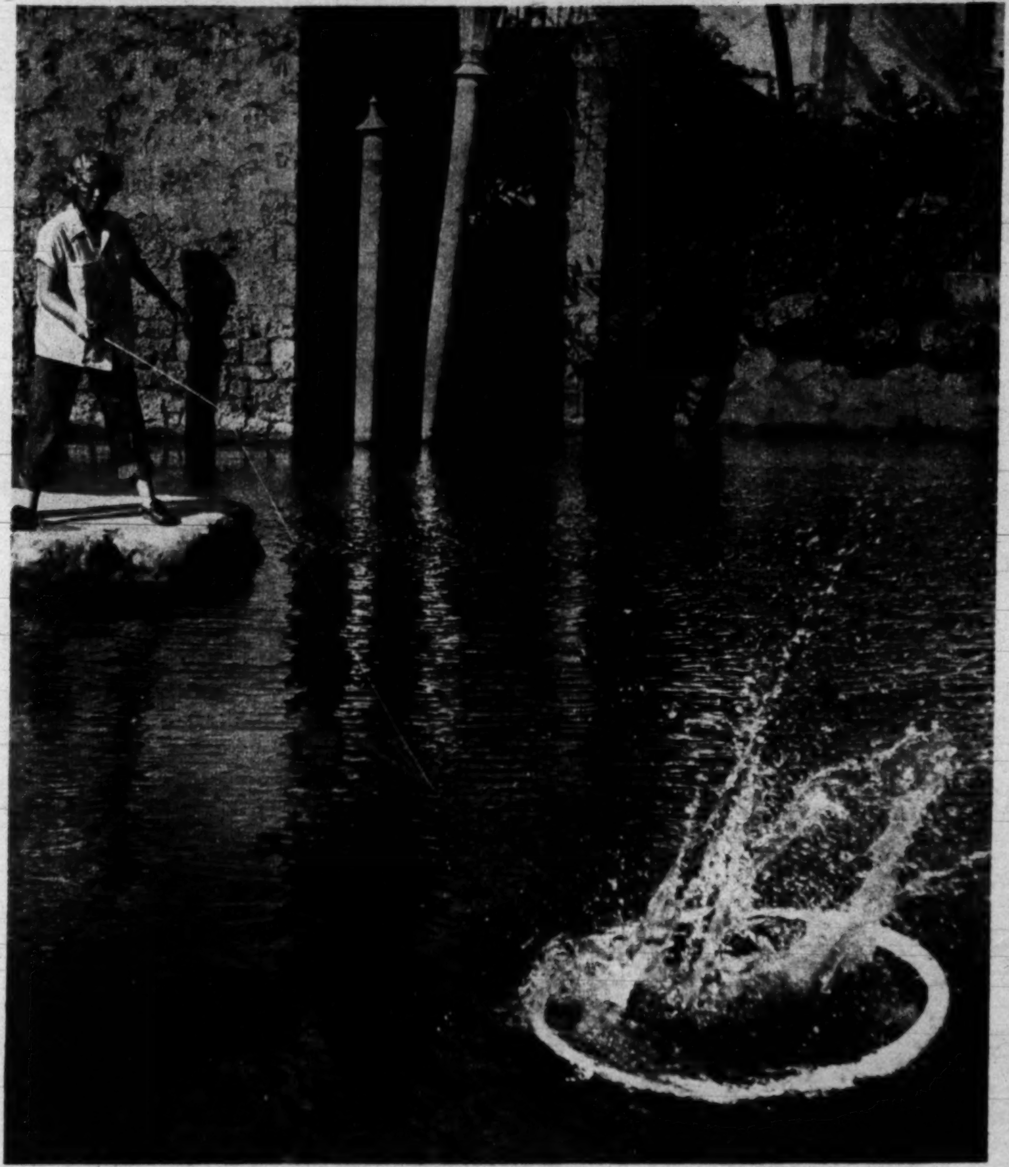
Skish, best played at pools, has its own set of rules. Rod and reel of standard type are required. The line must have a breaking point of not less than nine pounds. The plug may not weigh more than five-eighths ounce. The target, a wooden ring, must not be more than 30 inches in diameter.

Three casts are taken at each of ten targets at distances of 40 to 80 feet. Five points are given for a perfect cast at first try, three points for a second perfect cast and two points for a third. First player to get 100 points wins.

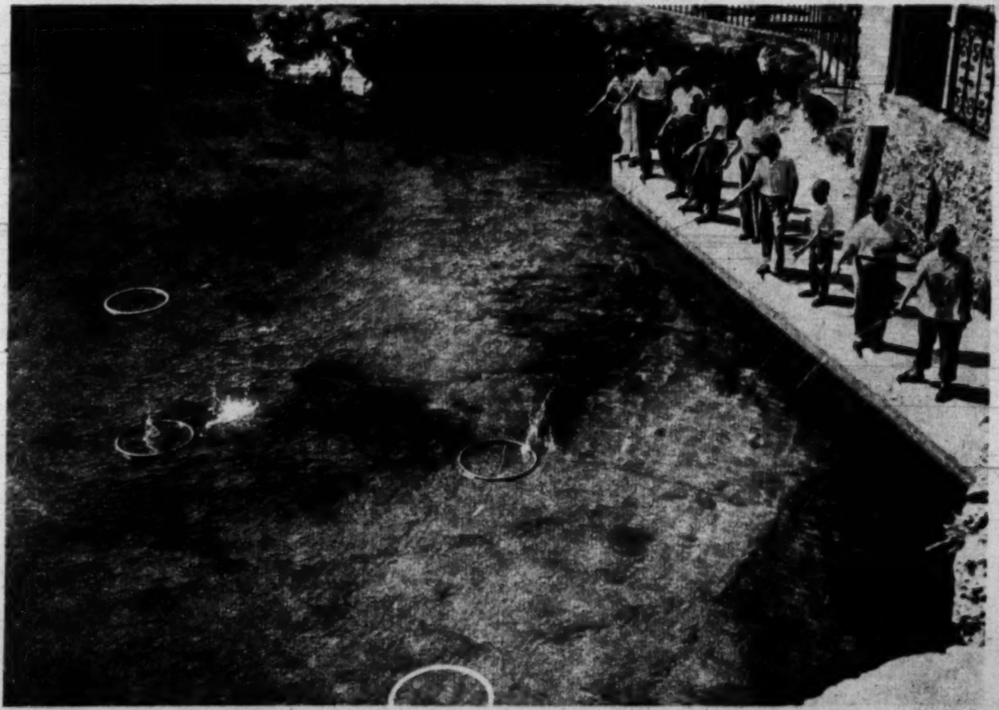
Skishers trick up the game by casting backward, over and around obstacles and while lying on their backs.

In Florida's Coral Gables, kids of the local Skish Club (see photos) are busy practicing for the National Skish Championship, to be held there in July. Some 500 adults and youngsters will compete.

Fish everywhere, it is said, are very happy about all this, because the more fishermen skish, the less they'll fish.



BULL'S-EYE smothers target ring in spray as 11-year-old Nancy Hughes practices casting. She'll be among the youngsters who will compete in the next national championship.



ON TARGET: Nine skishers aim at four targets as they limber up for the forthcoming championship. Second from right is Chet Mosely, 13, only non-adult ever to win perfect score of 100.

Propaganda balloons, released from western Europe or ships at sea, would be blown over Russia by prevailing west-to-ea

Let's talk to the Russians by Balloon!

Leaflet-carrying balloons, says a top scientist, could lift our message

LET'S TELL America's story of freedom to the Russian people—with pamphlet-carrying balloons!

That's the suggestion of 82-year-old Nobel prize physicist, Dr. Robert A. Millikan, former head of the famed California Institute of Technology.

"The Russians can jam our Voice of America radio broadcasts, but they can't stop balloons," says Millikan.

The idea of attaching propaganda leaflets to thousands of small balloons, on which they would be borne by prevailing winds to areas behind the iron curtain, has been advanced before, notably by columnist Drew Pearson. Now Dr. Millikan adds the weight of scientific authority—and experience.

"We had a plan to flood Russia with propaganda leaflets during World War I," says Millikan. "The Russians were drifting away from the Allies, and we wanted to get them back.

"We got a test batch of balloons and sent them up 20,000 feet to blow east from Omaha. Some of them reached New York, 1,200 miles away. Others landed in Washington, D. C."

If the balloons had been launched from France and drifted the same distance, they would have landed well inside Russia. But the idea was scrapped.

Prevailing Winds Take Them East

Prevailing west to east winds—ever present at upper-altitudes—do the work, according to the California scientist. Five-foot, hydrogen-filled, rubber balloons (they cost about two dollars apiece) launched from points in France or Great Britain – or from ships – east winds. Balloons would explode at pre-set times, scattering the leaflets.

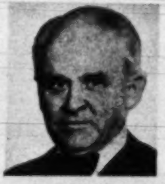
would be carried toward Russia.

In Washington, a spokesman for the Office of Naval Research pointed out recently that the Navy has sent balloons carrying 70 pounds of instruments to 100,000 feet. Clock mechanisms cause them to explode at predetermined times, parachuting instruments to earth.

Similar balloons, redesigned for distance instead of altitude, could be employed to shower propaganda leaflets over specified areas far away.

At the State Department, it's admitted candidly that "the balloon idea has been kicked around quite a bit for quite a long period of time." Beyond that, the Department is diplomatically mum.

It has been learned, however, that the use of propaganda balloons has been under serious study in high government circles. Chief stumbling block, of course, is the question of legality. Would the release of propaganda balloons frankly intended to cross her borders be a violation of the Soviet Union's sovereignty?



Dr. Robert Millikan

Scientist Millikan doesn't think so. "The Russians," he says, "cannot prevent us from doing what we want in this country. The question of national sovereignty is not involved."

Millikan considers the idea far advanced beyond a stage of mere theory.

"During World War II," he points out, "the Japanese sent balloons carrying incendiary flares across the Pacific to our West Coast." Now, he suggests, let's use them to carry America's message–of peace!

Mix your own Fruit Salad

By BETH MERRIMAN

WE LIKE THE IDEA of combining salad and dessert in a single course, such as a fruit salad with a special dressing. And our guests always like the idea of concocting their own salads from a luscious display of fruits and salad greens. For the salad in the picture we chose pineapple chunks, strawberries, grapes, bananas, orange and grapefruit sections. The dressing is very special in flavor—and so easy to make!

French Dressing

1 cup salad oil
⅓ cup cider vinegar
1 to 3 teaspoons sugar
1½ teaspoons salt
½ teaspoon paprika
½ teaspoon dry mustard
1 garlic clove

Measure all ingredients into a bottle or jar. Cover tightly and shake well. Chill several hours. Shake well before serving. Know how to choose Diamonds?

By ALEXANDER KUTH

Elizabeth Taylor wears emerald-cut gem in "Father of the Bride."

THE BOY got down on his knees wearing what he hoped was a romantic expression. He fumbled in his coat pocket. The girl squealed with surprise as she saw what he produced: "Oh, Jack! It's an engagement ring!"

There's only one thing wrong with this pretty little scene. It seldom happens this way nowadays. Half of the 1,500,000 couples who will marry this year will shop together for the engagement ring.

Most dealers in diamond jewelry say that even when a man does come into the store alone, he has been "briefed" by the girl. She knows the style she wants. All he has to worry about is price, color, size, cutting and clarity.

Incidentally, many jewelers suggest that when a young man and his girl plan to select a ring together, the groom-to-be should visit the store alone, beforehand. Then he can tell the jeweler about what he wants to spend and make sure his girl is shown only diamonds he can afford.

Tips on Sparklers

One of the world's largest diamond jewelers offers these tips to diamond buyers:

- First, choose a becoming style. The hand that needs slenderizing looks best with a slim, oblong stone. The small dainty hand should bear a trimly-tailored diamond. The large, square hand can carry a more sizeable gem.
- Know how to discuss "cut" and "setting" with your jeweler. A diamond sparkles because it is cut all over the surface with little smooth sides called facets. The "cut" of a diamond refers to the pattern in which these facets are arranged and to the shape of the stone. There's the Brilliant Cut, round and shaped like a child's top; the Emerald Cut, square or oblong in shape with facets polished along the sides and across the corners; and the boat-shaped Marquise Cut, currently enjoying a great revival. All have at least 58 facets.

The Same Stone Looks Larger

- "Settings" are important because they can make a stone look bigger than it really is.
- For example, the emerald-type setting gives a squarish, modern look to a round-cut diamond. It features four "beads" of metal spaced in a square to hold the diamond in place and increases its apparent size. The "extension" setting does the same trick. A rim or collar of highly-burnished metal is set all around a diamond, often increasing its apparent size as much as twenty-five percent!
- Then there's the "mermaid" setting which is ideal for girls who are delicate and fragile-looking. The metal is shaped into "fishtail" prongs giving an airy, filagree look to the ring.
- Perfect for the out-of-doors girl is the clover or cleft setting. In this, the "beads" are divided into thirds like a clover leaf and pressed down over the stone. It is an extremely firm setting.
- Lots of girls like extra trimmings on their rings—small decorative stones on each side of the main gem. However, this may mean the ring will cost more or the big diamond won't be as perfect. The best buy for an engagement ring is still the solitaire.

The metal used in a ring has a lot to do with its eye-appeal. A white diamond looks whiter set in a metal like white gold, platinum or palladium. Yellow gold is a traditional favorite. And it's most often used if the man is going to wear a wedding ring, too. (Before the war only 15% of the marrying males wore wedding bands; now 85% do.)

A man should know something about prices and values, too, when he ushers his fiancee through a jeweler's door. It is quite possible to have two stones of identical weight and size vary in price from $75 to $1,000! What makes the difference is the cutting, color and the clarity of the gem.

Most of Us Wear $200 Rings

The average amount spent this year in the U.S. for a diamond engagement ring will be about $200; its size—about ¼ of a carat.

Carbon spots or other natural flaws, even though invisible to the naked eye, greatly reduce the value of a stone. If perfection doesn't mean much to you, you can buy a lot of sparkle and size for a little money!

One more thing: jewelers say that it is the girl who tries to hold back on the price of the ring. They think it's because she wants to make it easier to buy that new washing machine later on!

Extension setting rims diamond with metal to enlarge its appearance.

Marquise cut with boat-shaped contour has slenderizing effect on hand.

Rings above show relative size of stones ranging from $125 to $800.

Warming up on the wire, Alzana does a handstand 50 feet above the ground.

OUTSIDE their trailer home, Alzana's wife Minnie helps Elsie, a sister-in-law, exercise back muscles so vital to an aerialist.

Look Out Below!

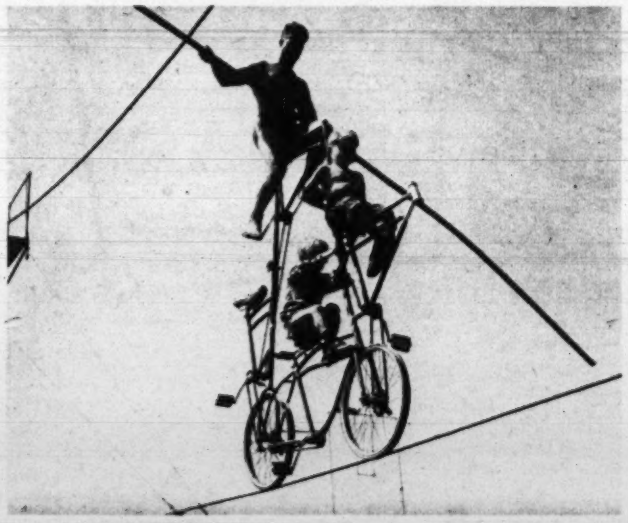
By FRANK DeBLOIS

AT 8:30 ALMOST ANY SPRING NIGHT—somewhere in the U.S. – a handsome brass band lets go with a tremendous blast and the greatest show on earth gets under way.

To Harold Alzana, who has been walking the high wire at the Ringling Brothers and Barnum and Bailey Circus since 1946, this moment is always the high point of the day.

Often, while he is standing in the wings, his ears filled with the blare of the band, the cry of the peanut men and the caterwauling of the customers, he reflects upon the chance decision that turned him from a Welsh coal miner into the most daring aerialist alive.

"I walked out of the pits one day," he recalled on a recent evening "and suddenly I decided to get a job with a carnival. Since then I've broken both legs twice, cracked my spine and splintered four ribs and my collarbone. But I'd still rather be here than in the mines with all my bones intact."



SPARE TIME is spent by Alzana educating son, 6, and nephew, 7, in intricacies of the high wire.

This adventurous attitude is typical of circus folk. It is shared by Pinito Del Oro, who swings on a high trapeze without using her hands; Leon De Rosseau, who does a backward somersault from a 40-foot platform to the ground; Unus, who stands on one finger atop a flagpole, and Alzana's own family, wife Minnie and sisters Hilda and Elsie, who are with him in the act, and son, Johnny, 6, who is not.

"When you're on the wire," says Minnie, "you don't think about falling. You just think about staying up there."

He Chose an Italian Name

Alzana regards Minnie as the most gifted performer in his act. He himself is so highly regarded by other members of the circus troupe that they often cluster about the wings to watch him perform. He joined the big show four years ago after changing his name from Davis to Alzana while doing an umbrella act on the high wire in Wales.

"All the best wire men had Italian names," he says, "so I picked one out for myself."

When he arrived with his wife, his son, his two sisters and his father at the circus winter quarters in 1946, Alzana disturbed veteran circus men by disregarding even the most rudimentary rules of safety. Although his act is performed at a height of 50 feet, Alzana has consistently refused to use a net.

Despite this lack of protection, Alzana and his family are as free from inhibitions on the high wire as a group of tree toads on a backyard maple. Although surrounded by empty space, they skip rope, run back and forth on the wire with umbrellas, ride bicycles, turn cartwheels and do handstands with nothing below them to break their fall but the floor.

Daddy to the Rescue

When the act originated, Alzana's 65-year-old father, an old carnival man, was given the assignment of catching the members of his family should they topple from the wire. But Alzana, Sr., left the act in 1947 and now the show goes on minus this protection.

The elder Alzana's retirement was brought about by an incident which almost eliminated the act for all time.

During a performance in November, 1947, Alzana and his sister Hilda fell 40 feet when a roustabout let a rope fall against Alzana's balancing pole. His father caught them both, but cracked a vertebra in his back while doing it.

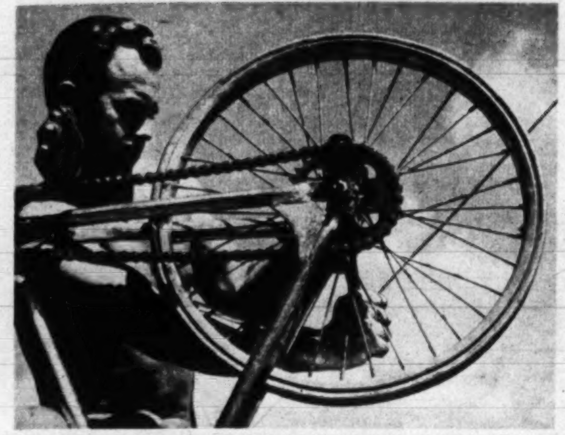
"He was in the hospital for six months," says Alzana, "and when he got out he wanted to get back into the act. But we wouldn't let him. Bad for his heart, we figured."

In his fall Alzana broke three ribs and Hilda broke her spine. She stayed out of the act during the 1948 season but Harold was back again in the spring, practicing a new bicycle act which is still regarded by circus officials as being too dangerous to perform in public.

"That Alzana," says Art Concello, general manager of the circus, "isn't the safest insurance risk in the world."

This year Alzana's act is more dangerous than ever. He does things never before at-

Photographs By MAXWELL COPLAN



BACKBONE of Alzana's daredevil act is this bicycle on which he lavishes constant care and attention.

Harold Alzana stars in the most dangerous act under the big top tempted on the high wire, but still he isn't satisfied. For so fierce is the competition among circus daredevils that each year Alzana is forced to outsensationalize such spectacular personalities as Ugo Bogino, who jumps over five elephants while turning somersaults in mid-air; the Flying Concellos, and the Geraldos, a rival aerial troupe which has returned to the circus after a bad spill a year ago.

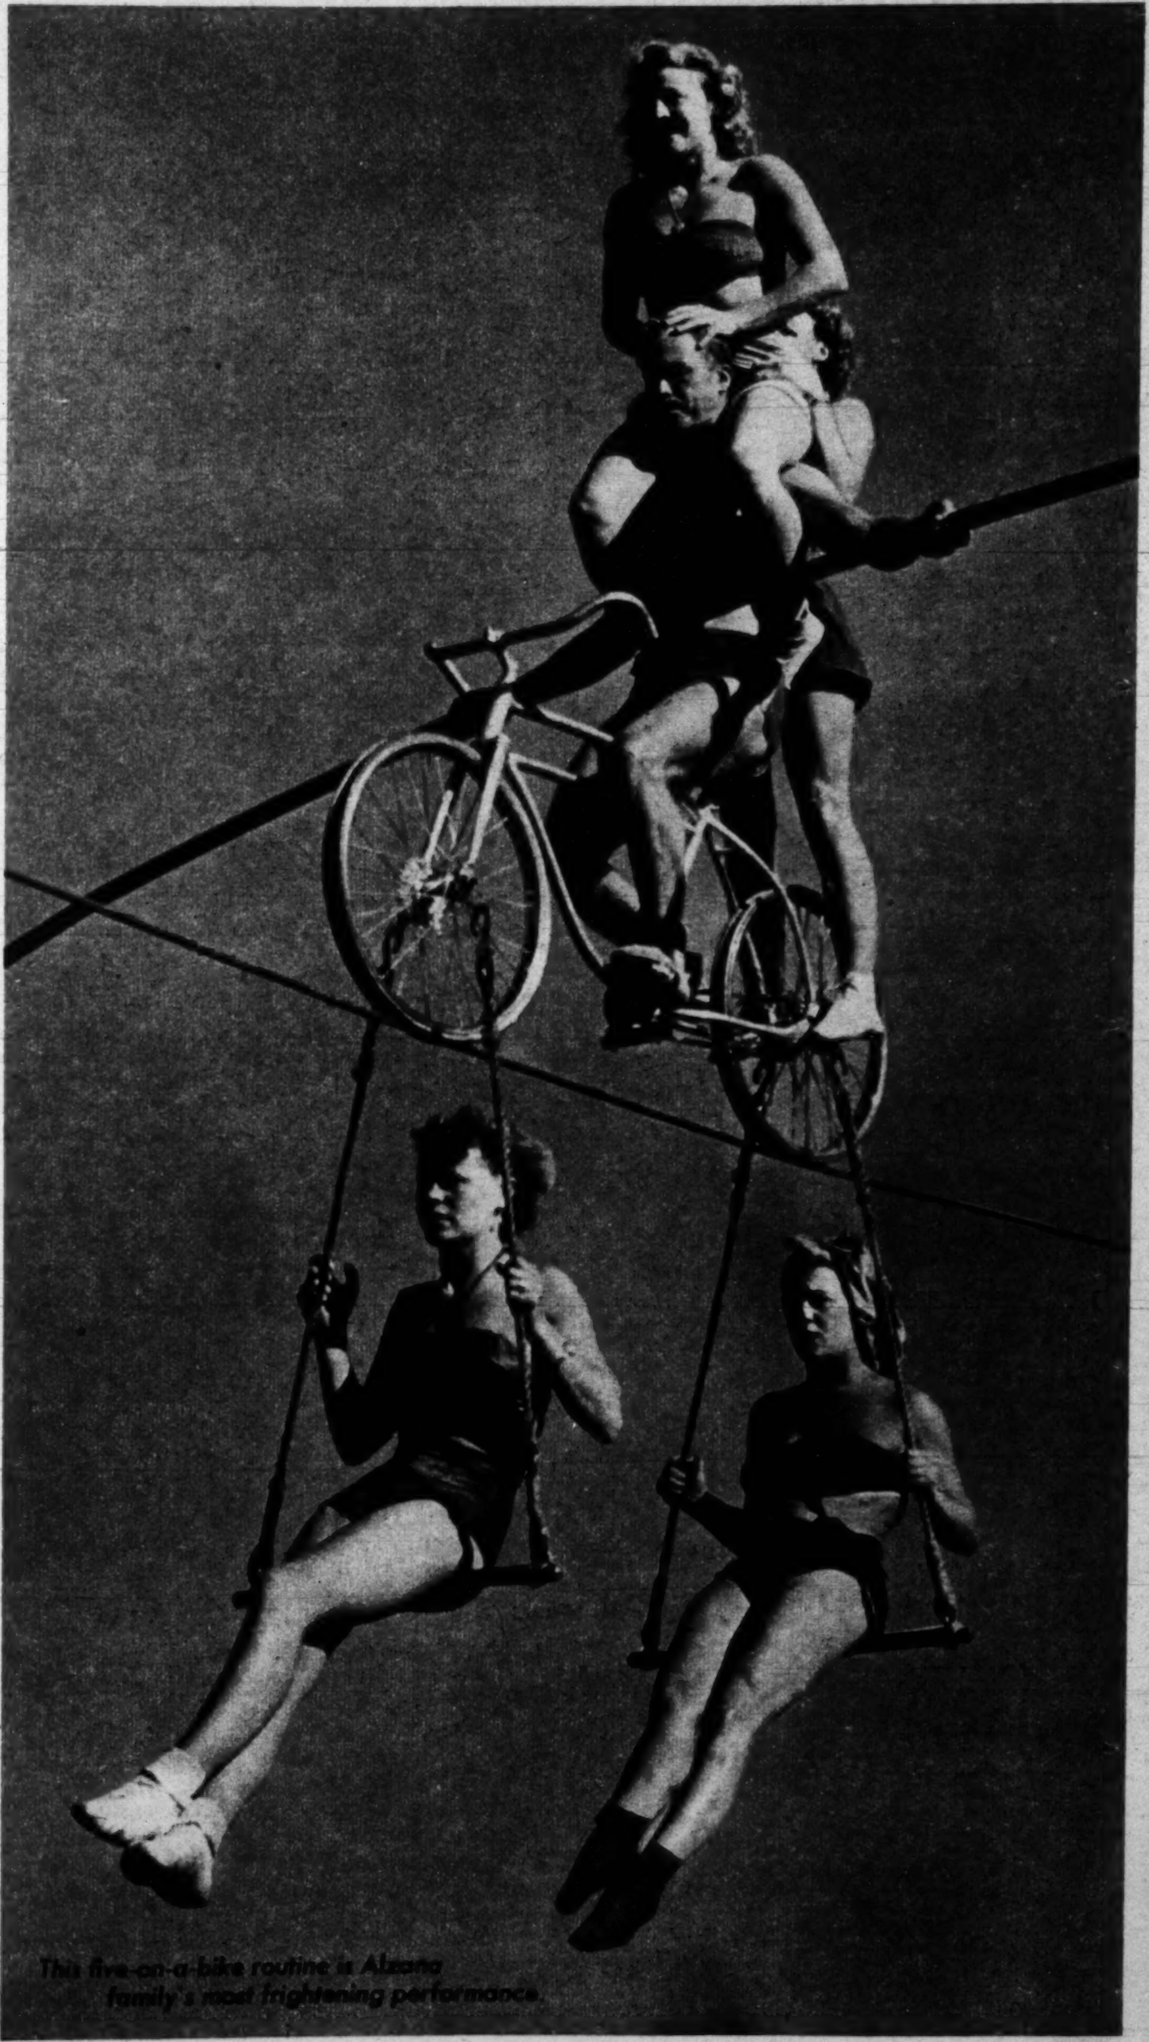
The object of these hair-raising acts apparently is to reduce members of the audience to babbling hysteria. Yet Alzana, whose performance is probably the most dangerous on the entire program, sometimes wishes that circus customers wouldn't scream so much.

"When they screech," he says, "I always start laughing. And that worries me because when I laugh I lose my balance. Someday I'm gonna laugh myself right out of this act."

AFTER HOURS Alzana relaxes in card game with wife, Minnie, brother-in-law, sisters Hilda and Elsie.



This five-on-a-bike routine is Alzana family's most frightening performance.

Spirit of Yankees paid off last fall when they trimmed the Dodgers in World Series. This celebration followed.

Mel Allen gives the lowdown on . . .

Radio Announcer Mel Allen is "Voice of the Yankees."

That Yankee Spirit

CAN THE NEW YORK YANKEES win again?

That's a question I'm asked at least 20 times a day.

Followers of the Boston Red Sox scoff at the Yankees' chances this year. And so do partisans of the Detroit Tigers and the Cleveland Indians.

Maybe they're right. But experience has taught me not to sell the Yankees short. Remember their comeback last year?

Let's look at the record:

The Yankees won their first American League pennant in 1921. Since then they've won the flag 16 times and they've captured the world series on a dozen occasions. In these 29 years, Detroit has won four pennants, Philadelphia and Washington three and Cleveland, Boston and St. Louis one apiece.

It has been said that the Yankees began to win pennants only when the late Col. Jacob Ruppert began to buy the players. That's true, but the Yankees kept right on winning even after Ruppert's players had faded out of the picture.

No, I don't think that's why the Yankees win pennants. I think there's another reason. It's called esprit de corps. I don't care if that sounds corny. The Yankees really have it.

Without team spirit a manager–no matter how gifted – finds the pennant road a mighty rocky highway. But with it, a good team is unbeatable. The old Baltimore Orioles had it and so did the great teams of John McGraw, the St. Louis Cardinals' famous "Gas House Gang," and Connie Mack's Philadelphia Athletics of the early 1930s. The Yankees, somehow, have always had that undefinable will-to-win that makes champions.

Mize Caught on Fast

Johnny Mize can tell you that there's something special about the spirit of the Yankees. Manager Casey Stengel bought Mize from the Giants late last year and put him in the Yankee line-up. In his first time up he slammed a two-run homer off Cleveland's Bob Feller.

"There's that Yankee spirit already in Mize," a well-known sports writer said to me.

Something mysterious in the Yankee atmosphere had set off a spark in the fading veteran. He didn't know just what it was, but he felt it.

A few days later, another veteran, pitcher Hugh Casey, joined the Yankees.

"Hugh," said Mize, "you've been around a mighty long time, haven't you?"

"Yeah," said Casey. "Why?"

"Well, I know you've played on a lot of good teams. But, brother, wait until you've been around here for a couple of days. You're in for a new experience."

That Winning Feeling

Mize didn't explain what it was. It was something he felt when he pinch-hit in the third game of the world series last fall. Johnny hit the right field screen at Ebbetts Field to drive in the two runs that won the game.

In 1947 the Yankees picked up George McQuinn who had been given his unconditional release by Philadelphia. Immediately McQuinn regained all his old skills and helped the team to a pennant and a world championship. That extra something that went with a Yankee uniform did the trick.

Buddy Hassett had knocked around with several clubs before the Yankees saved him from the baseball boneyard in 1942. Buddy went on to enjoy the best year of his career.

"A ball player is 30 points better when he has the letters 'Y-A-N-K-E-E-S' spelled across his chest," Buddy told me.

Even that perennial diamond nomad, Bobo Newsom, came under the spell. The Yankees hired Bobo in 1947–in the twilight of his career – and he won several key games for them in the pennant drive.

But let's go back to opening day in 1949. At that time the Yanks looked bad. Jo DiMaggio was in the hospital with an ailing heel. Charlie Keller and Phil Rizzutto were laid up. Morale was low.

The atmosphere was gloomy that day when Manager Stengel called a meeting. Keller stood up.

"We're better than we've looked this spring," said Keller. "We're the Yankees, fellows, and the Yankees never quit!"

Then Tommy Henrich joined in.

ANKLE in cast, Joe DiMaggio missed 65 games last year, then led Yankees in pennant drive.

YOGI BERRA sprained foot twice in 1949 season, yet led team in runs-batted-in.

TOMMY HENRICH battled injuries all year, played first base with a broken toe.

"As long as I've been with the Yankees, there's always been a deep feeling of pride in wearing this uniform," he said. "It stands for something great."

Then Henrich went out and hit a game-winning home run.

All season long the story was the same. The Yankees knew they could win and 74 injuries to key players failed to halt their surge. The team's power hitter–DiMaggio, Henrich and Berra – played together in only 17 games. Henrich broke his toe and played in spite of it. Berra suffered split fingers and broken bones but still led the club in runs-batted-in.

DiMaggio missed the first 65 games of the season and suddenly jumped into action without a chance to get into condition. Facing the Red Sox, he hit four homers in three games.

"The Yankees have always been the best," DiMaggio said then. "We all just try to keep them that way."

Manager Stengel said the same thing in a different way.

Let's Go Get 'Em!

"I played under McGraw when the Giants were great," says Casey, "but when I first came to the Yankees I was amazed at their spirit. Why, after losing the toughest kind of a ball game, those boys would walk out of the clubhouse with their heads high, determined to get 'em tomorrow. I thought I had seen it all, but they showed me something."

To ball players, being a Yankee is a feeling that we all have in being Americans. It's the same kind of team spirit that has made Americans great. Nobody knows what the Yankees will do this year, but one thing everybody knows is: whether in a nation or a ball club, you can't sell that kind of greatness short!

Tips on Posing

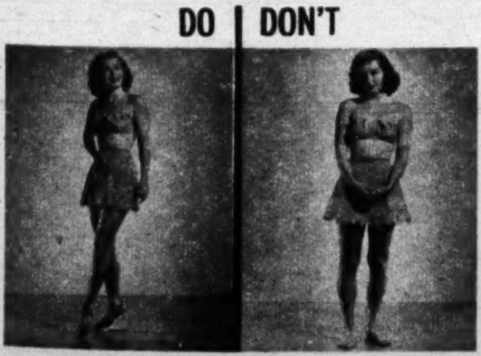
It's position that counts in bathing suit shots

NOW IS THE TIME to brush up on the elements of good beach snapshots. Here is some Hollywood advice, illustrated by 20th Century-Fox starlet Peggy O'Connor of "I'll Get By."

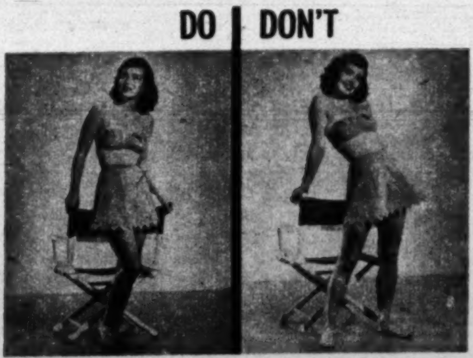
Don't pose flatfooted. Do stand on the toes or wear high clogs to give the long-stemmed look. Keep feet together.

Do use simple props like beach chairs to gain atmosphere, but don't let them throw the body into awkward angles and bulges.

In sitting, always pose with legs in profile and avoid distorting closeups.



STAND erect, with body partly turned to either side. High sandals prevent flat-footed look.



USE beach props as background, not as support. Weight on arms creates bad shoulder, hip bulge.

WHEN SLEEP WON'T COME AND YOU FEEL GLUM

Use Chewing-Gum Laxative—
REMOVES WASTE...NOT GOOD FOOD

- When you can't sleep—feel just awful because you need a laxative—do as MILLIONS do—chew FEEN-A-MINT.

FEEN-A-MINT is wonderfully different! Doctors say many other laxatives start their "flushing" action too soon...right in the stomach. Large doses of such laxatives upset digestion, flush away nourishing food you need for health and energy . . . you feel weak, worn out.

But gentle FEEN-A-MINT, taken as recommended, works chiefly in the lower bowel where it removes only waste, not good food! You avoid that weak, tired feeling. Use FEEN-A-MINT and feel fine, full of life! 25¢, 50¢, or only 10¢

FEEN-A-MINT
FAMOUS CHEWING-GUM LAXATIVE

Proves Wonderful For Itching Skin!

To promptly soothe itching and aid healing of eczema, rashes, psoriasis, ringworm, pimples and similar surface skin and itchy scalp irritations—apply Zemo. This doctor's highly medicated invisible Zemo liquid is backed by amazing record of success. Greaseless! Stainless! For stubborn cases buy Extra Strength Zemo.

Ann Pillsbury recommends

STARLIGHT MINT SURPRISE COOKIES

Submitted by Miss Laura Rott, Naperville, Illinois

Bake at 375° F. for 10 to 12 minutes.
Makes 4½ dozen cookies.

Sift . . .
3 cups sifted Pillsbury's Best Enriched Flour
1 teaspoon soda
½ teaspoon salt

Cream . . .
½ cup butter
½ cup shortening

Add . . .
1 cup sugar
½ cup firmly packed brown sugar gradually. Mix thoroughly.

Add . . .
2 eggs, unbeaten
2 tablespoons water
1 teaspoon vanilla; beat well.

Blend in . . .
dry ingredients; mix thoroughly. Chill for at least 2 hours.

Open . . .
1 package (9-oz.) Rockwood Chocolate Mint Wafers.

Shape . . .
cookies by enclosing each wafer in about 1 tablespoon of dough.

Place . . .
on greased baking sheet about 2 inches apart.

Top . . .
each cookie with a walnut half.

Bake . . .
in moderate oven (375° F.) for 10 to 12 minutes.

IF THAT SNORKEL SUBMARINE IS GOING TO TORPEDO US BEFORE WE REACH OKINAWA, WHY DON'T THEY DO IT AND GET IT OVER?
THAT'S ONLY ONE ANGLE! OLD GANGLIA HAS A BOMB LOCKED IN WITH HIM DOWN IN THE HOLD BESIDE THE GIANT BRAIN! HE COULD BLOW HIMSELF UP AND SINK THE SHIP!
I HAVE A HUNCH GANGLIA DOESN'T REALLY WANT TO COMMIT SUICIDE... —LISTEN TO THIS IDEA...
SPILL IT, CANYON!
MEANWHILE = ... THE HOLD IN WHICH GANGLIA HAS LOCKED HIMSELF....
... COULDN'T HAVE BEEN A MISTAKE ON MY PART... IT WAS THAT SECRETARY, FEETA-FEETA! SHE GAVE ME AWAY...

HIGH ABOVE THE SWAMPLAND IN A TALL DEAD TREE, THREE YOUNG RED-TAILED HAWKS SCREAM FOR FOOD
ALL DAY THEY HAVE EXERCISED NEWLY FEATHERED WINGS, BUT THEY'RE AFRAID TO MAKE THEIR FIRST FLIGHT!
AS THE HOURS PASS, NO MEAT IS BROUGHT BY THE PARENT BIRDS!
SUDDENLY THE STERN MOTHER DROPS FROM THE BLUE WITH A RAT IN HER TALONS...
BUT INSTEAD OF ALIGHTING ON THE NEST EDGE, SHE SAILS BY JUST OUT OF REACH!
FORGETTING EVERYTHING BUT THE TANTALIZING FOOD, THE BABIES LEAP FRANTICALLY AFTER THE BAIT...
AND IN ONE PAINLESS LESSON HAVE LEARNED TO FLY!

WELL, WHAT'S GOING ON?
MOTHER AND I ARE GOING TO PAINT THE BATHROOM.
MOTHER SAYS IT WILL BE CHEAPER THAN HIRING A PAINTER.
NO YOU DON'T! NOTHING DOING.
THE LAST TIME YOUR MOTHER PAINTED THE BATHROOM, SHE USED $10 WORTH OF PAINT AND RUINED $6 WORTH OF BRUSHES....
BY LETTING PAINT DRY IN THEM. RUINED TWO PAIR OF SLACKS AND A NEW SWEATER.
I PAID THE MAID FOR TWO DAYS TO SCRAPE UP THE DROPPINGS, HIRED A PLASTERER TO PATCH UP WHERE SHE TRIED TO TAKE DOWN THE FIXTURES, HAD TO THROW OUT THE BATHMAT.

I COULD HAVE HIRED REMBRANDT TO PAINT IT FOR LESS.

WHO DOES THAT COMEDIAN THINK HE IS... PETER LIND HAYES?
HELLO – SWELL PARTY, ISN'T IT? WHY DON'T YOU COME IN FOR A SWIM?
I'VE GOT A BETTER IDEA. WHY DON'T YOU COME OUT AND WE'LL HAVE A CIGARETTE?
BASKING IN THE SUN WITH YOU IS A REAL PLEASURE. BUT I THINK I'LL SKIP THE CIGARETTES. THEY DON'T SEEM TO AGREE WITH MY THROAT LATELY
WELL, IF YOU FEEL THAT WAY ABOUT IT —YOU OUGHT TO MAKE THE 30-DAY TEST—WITH CAMELS. HERE, TRY ONE NOW!
SAY, YOU'VE GOT SOMETHING HERE! THIS CAMEL TASTES GREAT! SORRY I HAVE TO RUSH OFF, BUT I'M LATE FOR WORK ALREADY!
HEY, WAIT A MINUTE!
HE NEVER MENTIONED HIS NAME, BUT HE SURE LOOKS LIKE HIM!
SEVERAL WEEKS LATER
AND NOW THAT GREAT COMEDIAN... AND MIMIC...
I WAS RIGHT! HE IS PETER LIND HAYES! — I THINK HE'S WONDERFUL!
WE ONLY MET FOR A MOMENT, BUT I DIDN'T FORGET HER TIP ON CAMELS. I MADE THE 30-DAY TEST AND...
YES, HE'S ONE OF THE TOP COMICS IN THE COUNTRY. I'VE SEEN HIM ON BROADWAY AND WATCHED HIM ON TELEVISION, TOO!
AND TO THINK I DIDN'T PLACE YOU THAT DAY AT THE PARTY. I WASN'T SURE...
BUT YOU WERE SURE RIGHT ABOUT CAMELS! DOING THREE SHOWS A NIGHT ISN'T EASY ON MY THROAT. CAMEL MILDNESS IS MIGHTY WELCOME TO ME!
LET'S HAVE A CAMEL RIGHT NOW!
BELIEVE ME, MY THROAT GETS A WORKOUT! THE 30-DAY TEST PROVED CAMELS AGREE WITH MY THROAT. THEY SUIT ME TO A 'T'

Prince Valiant IN THE DAYS OF KING ARTHUR
BY HAROLD R FOSTER
HAL FOSTER

Synopsis: PRINCE VALIANT IS BEING SENT TO ROME ON A MISSION TO THE HEAD OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH, A LONG AND PERILOUS JOURNEY ACROSS TURBULENT EUROPE.

ALL ARRAYED IN BRIGHT NEW ARMOR, VAL, RUFUS REGAN, EGIL AND ARF DESCEND TO THE WAITING BOATS.

VAL LOOKS BACK AT THE PICTURE HE IS TO CARRY IN HIS HEART DURING THE LONG PARTING--CHEERY FAREWELLS THAT END IN A LITTLE SOB.

IT IS A LONG DAY'S MARCH TO THE SEA, FOR IN ANCIENT DAYS THE CITIES WERE BUILT FAR INLAND AWAY FROM THE THREAT OF SUDDEN INVASION FROM THE SEA. BUT VAL AND HIS COMPANIONS HAVE NO TIRESOME MARCH; THEY PLUNGE SEAWARD DOWN A RIVER SWOLLEN BY THE SPRING FRESHET!

A SILENT FIGURE STANDS BESIDE THE RIVER AND WATCHES THEM GLIDE BY, THEN DISAPPEARS INTO THE FOREST.

A WEEK LATER HE STANDS BEFORE HAP-ATLA, YOUNG KING OF THE INNER LANDS, AND REPORTS: " "PRINCE VALIANT IS GONE AND THE MEN OF KING AGUAR HAVE SCATTERED TO DO THEIR SPRING PLANTING."

NEXT WEEK- Hap-Atla

OH, SO IT'S RAINING AND YOU CAN'T CUT THE LAWN TODAY? NOW THAT'S JUST DANDY, ISN'T IT?
THAT ALSO MAKES IT JUST A DANDY DAY FOR YOU TO CLEAN OUT THE BASEMENT! THEN YOU CAN STRAIGHTEN UP THAT CLOSET OF YOURS!.
AFTER THAT YOU CAN TAKE ALL THAT JUNK OFF THE BACK PORCH UP TO THE ATTIC LIKE I TOLD YOU TO DO A MONTH AGO!.. THEN YOU CAN WAX THE FURNITURE FOR YOUR MOTHER!
CREEPERS!

WALT DISNEY'S Cinderella
IT'S THE MORNING AFTER THE ROYAL BALL, AND THE TINY KINGDOM BUZZES WITH THE DRAMATIC NEWS OF THE SEARCH FOR THE UNKNOWN MAIDEN WHO LOST HER GLASS SLIPPER AT THE PALACE!
...THE DUKE HAS ORDERS TO TRY THE SLIPPER ON EVERY MAIDEN...
...AND THE PRINCE HAS VOWED TO MARRY THE ONE WHOSE FOOT IT FITS!
THE SLIPPER MUST FIT ONE OF YOU. DO YOU UNDERSTAND?
OVERHEARING THE EXCITED TALK, CINDERELLA REALIZES FOR THE FIRST TIME THAT IT WAS THE PRINCE HIMSELF WITH WHOM SHE DANCED LAST NIGHT...AND THAT HE NOW WANTS HER FOR HIS BRIDE!
YOU SEE, THE PRINCE DOESN'T KNOW THAT GIRL'S NAME!
THE PRINCE! THE GLASS SLIPPER! I-I AM THAT GIRL!
CINDERELLA! WHAT ARE YOU SAYING?
GOODY GOODY FOR CINDERELLA!
CINDERELLA'S GOING TO MARRY THE PRINCE!
HOORAY! HOORAY!
AS CINDERELLA MOVES AWAY, THE STEPMOTHER FOLLOWS STEALTHILY!
SO! SHE'S THE ONE WHO DANCED WITH THE PRINCE ...AND IT'S HER SLIPPER!
THE DUKE IS COMING WITH MY SLIPPER! HE MUSTN'T SEE ME LOOKING LIKE THIS!
LOOKIT THAT MEAN STEPMOTHER FOLLOWING POOR CINDERELLA!
WHAT'S SHE GONNA DO NOW, HUH?
OH OH!
SSHH!--
IN HER ROOM, CINDERELLA TURNS SUDDENLY AS HER DOOR CREAKS INWARD!
OH! NO....

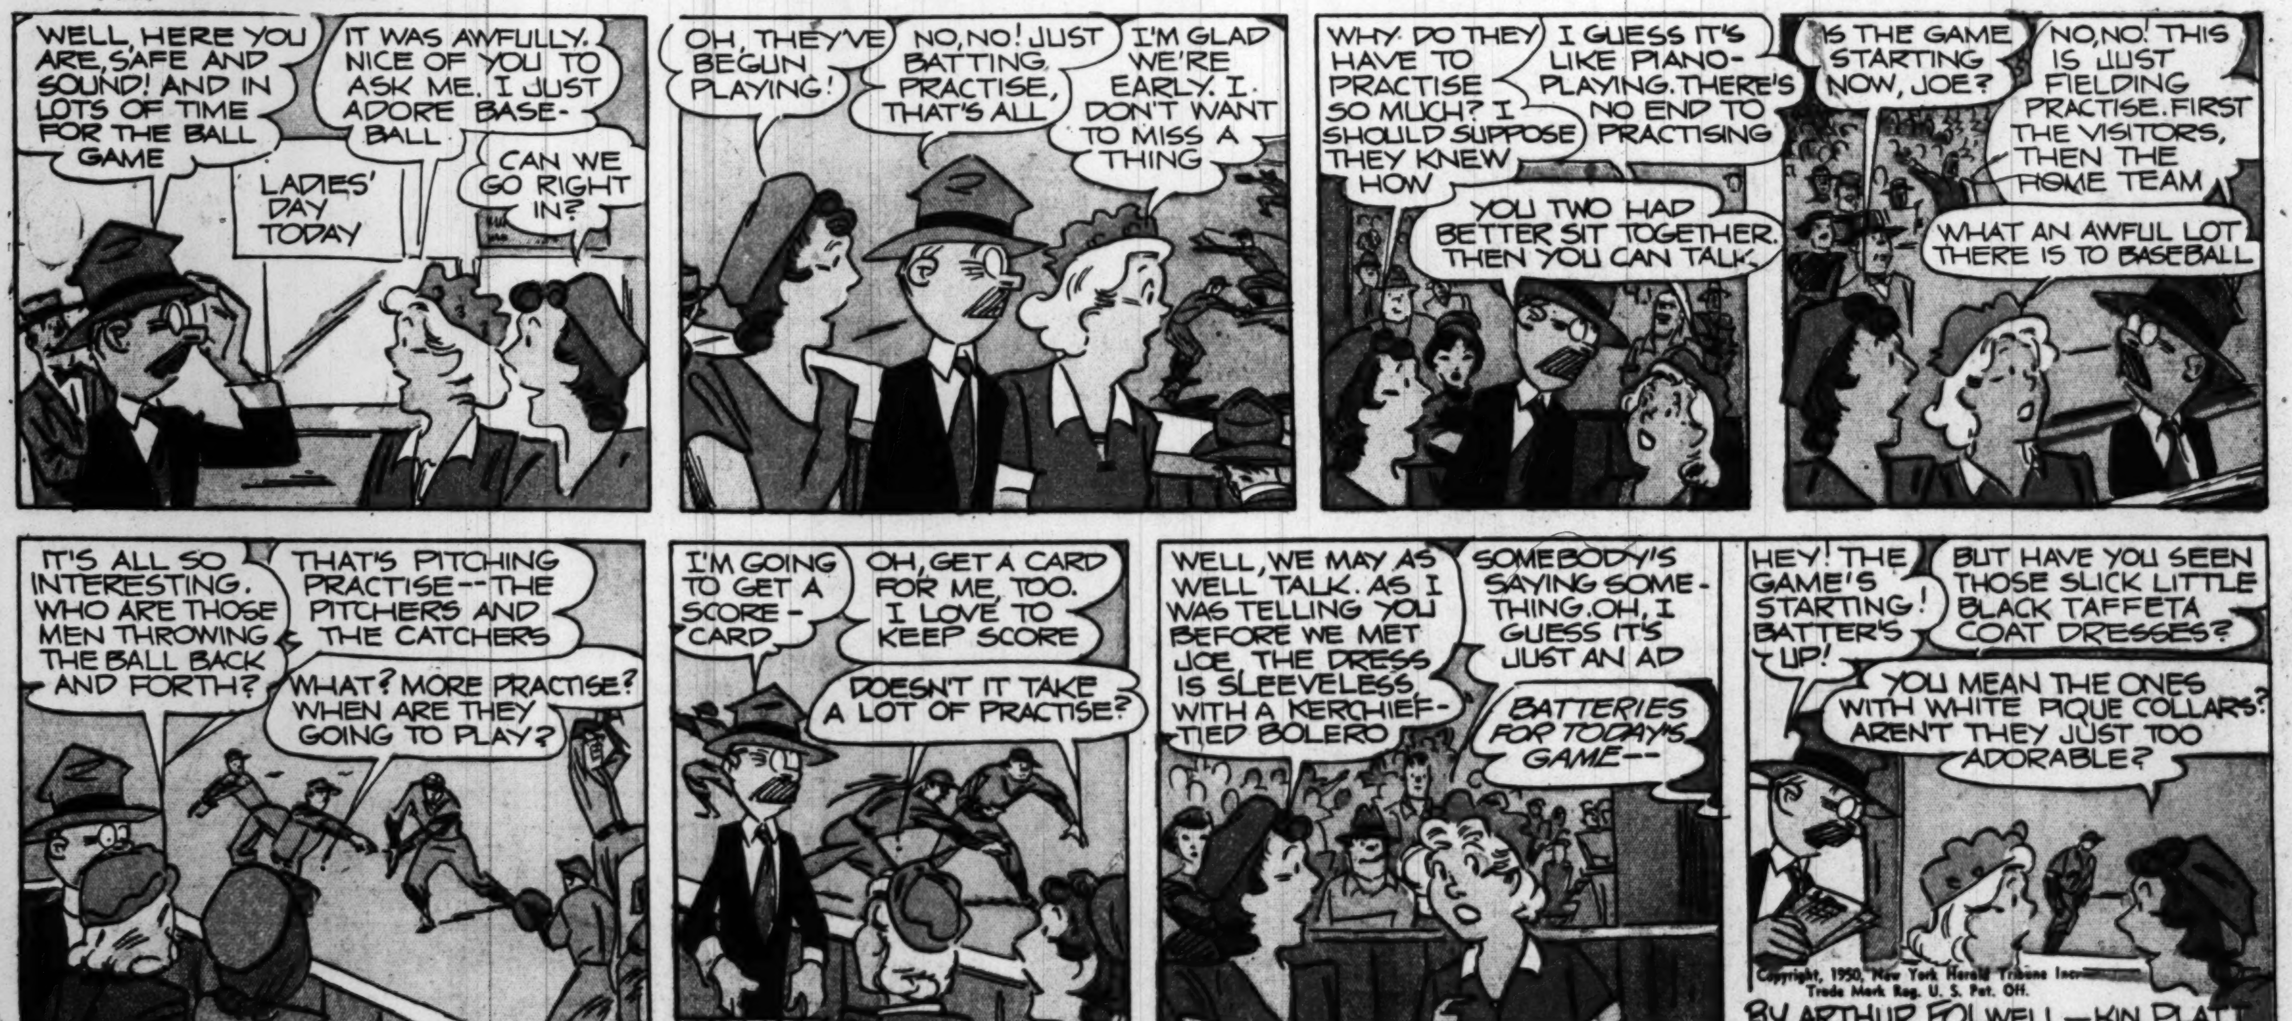
MR. AND MRS.

By Arthur Folwell-Kin Platt



WELL, HERE YOU ARE, SAFE AND SOUND! AND IN LOTS OF TIME FOR THE BALL GAME
IT WAS AWFULLY NICE OF YOU TO ASK ME. I JUST ADORE BASEBALL
LADIES' DAY TODAY CAN WE GO RIGHT IN?
OH, THEY'VE BEGUN PLAYING!
NO, NO! JUST BATTING PRACTISE, THAT'S ALL
I'M GLAD WE'RE EARLY. I DON'T WANT TO MISS A THING
WHY DO THEY HAVE TO PRACTISE SO MUCH? I SHOULD SUPPOSE THEY KNEW HOW I GUESS IT'S LIKE PIANO-PLAYING. THERE'S NO END TO PRACTISING
YOU TWO HAD BETTER SIT TOGETHER. THEN YOU CAN TALK.
IS THE GAME STARTING NOW, JOE?
NO, NO! THIS IS JUST FIELDING PRACTISE. FIRST THE VISITORS, THEN THE HOME TEAM
WHAT AN AWFUL LOT THERE IS TO BASEBALL
IT'S ALL SO INTERESTING. WHO ARE THOSE MEN THROWING THE BALL BACK AND FORTH?
THAT'S PITCHING PRACTISE--THE PITCHERS AND THE CATCHERS
WHAT? MORE PRACTISE? WHEN ARE THEY GOING TO PLAY?
I'M GOING TO GET A SCORE-CARD
OH, GET A CARD FOR ME, TOO. I LOVE TO KEEP SCORE DOESN'T IT TAKE A LOT OF PRACTISE?
MAY-28-50
WELL, WE MAY AS WELL TALK. AS I WAS TELLING YOU BEFORE WE MET JOE, THE DRESS IS SLEEVELESS, WITH A KERCHIEF-TIED BOLERO
SOMEBODY'S SAYING SOMETHING. OH, I GUESS IT'S JUST AN AD
BATTERIES FOR TODAY'S GAME--
HEY! THE GAME'S STARTING! BATTER'S UP!
BUT HAVE YOU SEEN THOSE SLICK LITTLE BLACK TAFFETA COAT DRESSES?
YOU MEAN THE ONES WITH WHITE PIQUE COLLARS? AREN'T THEY JUST TOO ADORABLE?
